FINANCIAL MARKETS

NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

NEW YORK CLOSE

New York, April 1 (AP)—After a somewhat upward flurry in today's early stock market dealings, the equities list turned extremely dull in late dealing. Initial improvement was led by the traffic which reflected the granting of an increase by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In the final hour most of the carriers pared morning advances. Exceptions to the rule were Santa Fe, Union Pacific and N. Y. Central, which were among the best. Coca-Cola ran up a point, but National Biscuit lost as much. Chrysler Corporation was active. Transfers approximated only 450,000 shares.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, April 1.—(CP)—The mining department of Toronto exchange closed strong and active this morning but trade soon dwindled.

Teck Hughes gold advanced 10 cents to 5.60. Hollinger and Lake Shore remained unchanged. In the secondary gold group Bralorne was up slightly for McWatters, Macassa, Kerr-Addison and Wasp.

Little Long Lac was off 5 cents at 5.35.

Modernac Silver gained 5 to 1.35. In the base metals Noranda held an advance of about 2 points while Waterman, Sherritt traded at 55 cents for a gain of 4 1-2.

Oils were quiet and unchanged.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, April 1 (CP)—A few isolated issues spotted the Industrial board of Toronto exchange in the early session today but the market as the whole declined slightly on the curb.

Nickel held a gain of 1-8 at 34 1-2 while International Petroleum, British American Oil and Dominion Tar also showed fair action.

Dominion Tar sold down a half point, while Imperial preferred dropped 6 points to 50.

Gains were posted for Canada Bread A, Consolidated Bakeries and Loblaw A and in the steels the Canadiens A and Dominion Steel each added 1-2 to 3-4. Pressed metals lost 1-4.

Shawinigan slipped a small fraction and Southern Canada Power at 4. The oils were unchanged, distillery stocks slow and steady and Ford A and Brazilian each receded about 1-4 point.

WALL STREET FINANCIAL

New York, April 1—(AP)— While the stock market did not overlook the fact it was April Fools' Day, a rising tendency in rail shares today engendered more optimistic trading tone in a resumption of the recent quiet dealings.

Among the more active carrier shares were those of Santa Fe, Pere Marquette and Hudson, Union Pacific, N.Y. Central, Southern Pacific, Pennsylvania and Baltimore and Ohio.

Others, up fractionally to a point included American Telephone, Western Union, Du Pont, U. S. Steel, General Motors, Chrysler, Johns-Manville, American Tobacco B, Allied Chemical, U. S. Industrial Alcohol, National Distillers and Bohn Aluminium.

Among shares of Canadian companies, International Nickel and Canadian Pacific ruled about steady. On the curb, Lake Shore got up a small fraction. Londonderry government bonds were quiet and narrow.

OFFICE EMPLOYEES ARE LOCKED OUT

300 Persons Affected by Hupp Motor Car Company's Act

Detroit, April 1. (AP) — All office employes of the Hupp Motor Car Company, including the entire engineering staff, were dismissed today and locked out of the plant. About 300 persons were affected by the action.

William R. Hurlburt, assistant to Archie J. Andrews, chairman of the company, described the action as a "purge."

The dismissal was an outgrowth of the federal court suit in which J. Walter Drake, former chairman, asked Andrews be required to resign and control ordered into hip him he said. The management, some of the dismissed office staff said, planned to "purge" the staff for knowledge of the management's affairs which reached Drake.

The notice said that applications for re-employment would be received by "loyal" workers.

George L. Schein, attorney for the Hupp Corporation, said the action was a "bloodless" purge.

"Disgruntled employes have betrayed company secrets to the opposition and to the New York Stock Exchange," he said. The exchange has called a hearing to determine whether the company's stock should be suspended from the trading list.

THE DAILY ONTARIO INTELLIGENCER is published every afternoon (Sunday and holidays excepted) at The Ontario Intelligencer Building, Front Street, Belleville, Ontario.

STORIES OF REBELLION DAYS

Fifty years ago all Canada was seething with excitement over the outbreaks in the Northwest. These were days when young men rushed to the colors as a glance over the stories of that day now running in the Ontario Intelligencer shows. Scores upon scores of names are to be found among the enlistments which are well known here today. Some names are not now familiar.

The impressions of that era have not yet died out. Those who are over sixty years of age recollect those days when Canadians had their first trouble since the Red River Rebellion of 1870.

Those who were not yet born in the days of those troubles take more than ordinary interest in the events of that spring of 1885. Those who do recall those days have read eagerly the local stories which have been appearing.

TOLLS ON HIGHWAYS

Another month has its story to tell of increases in accidents, fatalities, and the amount of property damages on the Ontario highways and roads for February. Accidents numbered 552 or four more than February of last year, and a greater total than for any previous February on record. There were 417 persons non-fatally injured during the month and the damage was reported at $53,747.

Fatalities increase very heavily, from 20 to 34, the greatest February total in history. This total was largely due to the collision with a railroad train which resulted in ten fatalities. The number of fatal accidents or accidents in which one or more persons were killed, while three more than the twenty in February, 1935, was not abnormally high for that month.

Twelve pedestrians were fatally injured as compared with ten in the same month a year ago.

In the truck-train fatal accident the coroner's jury emphasized the lack of ordinary safety precautions on the part of the driver as the main cause of the mishap. Similar evidence of neglect for safe driving is to be found in virtually every accident but in the behaviour of a large proportion of drivers and pedestrians in their ordinary use of the highways, says a bulletin of the Motor Vehicle Accident Branch.

"There are probably few persons who do not know the rudiments of highway safety, but they do not in many cases put them to use. The various safety organizations can teach care and thoughtfulness for the use of the streets and highways, but they cannot drive a motorist's car, for him or take a pedestrian's place on the roadway to see that their instructions are carried out. Until such time as each individual is willing to assume this responsibility, there is little hope for a large reduction in the number and seriousness of accidents," says the bulletin which goes on:

"The terrible tragedy near Fort William in which ten lives were lost in a collision between a truck and a railroad train again brings to the forefront the problem presented by level railroad crossings. During the past four-and-a-half years there have been 1,161 such accidents in Ontario, in which 225 lives have been lost. In each of the last three years there has been a decrease in the number of accidents and deaths from the totals of the previous year, but with thirteen deaths recorded during the first two months of 1935, as compared with two during the same two months of last year, there appears a likelihood of a substantial increase in the toll of accidents of this type when the total for the year is compiled. It is noteworthy that over 25 per cent. of the railroad crossing accidents of the last 54 months have occurred at crossings where gates or other protective devices had been installed. With over seventy per cent. of the accidents happening at unguarded crossings, it is evident that lack of protection is dangerous but the mishaps at guarded crossings show that there are many motorists who still fail to realize the danger such locations represent and, despite warnings or other safety measures, take needless chances.

The bulletin concludes:

"Railroad accidents are the most spectacular and consequently, the most widely publicized of all motor vehicle tragedies. There has been ample notoriety given to these accidents and it is a desired notoriety because while they constitute only a little more than one per cent. of the accidents reported, they account for almost ten per cent. of the deaths resulting from traffic accidents.

LICENSING OF BICYCLES

It would be a mistake to tax bicycles for revenue but there are a few bicyclists who would object to a small yearly fee to secure a registered marker that would assist the police to locate it if it were stolen. At the present time it is a comparatively easy matter to steal a bicycle, or a number of bicycles, interchange the parts re-build them practically—until the owners themselves are unable to recognize it properly. If every bicyclist were compelled to carry a marker on his machine it would be an easy matter for the police to spot bicycles when markers were missing, or when stolen markers were displayed.—Chatham News.

THE MANY-SIDED BUCHAN

When Colonel John Buchan was here a few months ago he remarked that while the British Isles were "fairly well integrated" the British Empire was still "in the making," that there could be no closer link between Britain and America than that they should be engaged together in the great and laborious task of establishing the balance of land and liberty which is the only meaning of civilization. It is a great asset for that cause that he to whom America is as "a second fatherland" is to have official governance within the Empire touches most extensively and most intimately our Republic. That he starts with a "hopeless prejudice" in our favor we interpret to mean that at least there is no obsequenciation. In what he called "the noble merchanting of civilization," he has credited us with giving as well as receiving.

On his recent unofficial visit to this continent he expressed a firm belief in democracy—that no State mechanism, however perfect, can get rid of the initiative and responsibility of the ordinary individual. It is to be expected that he will in his official life give notable illustration of that faith which he has unofficially and eloquently spoken for the two great English-speaking nations. And he is the more to be welcomed that he may become to the New World, and especially to its youth, what he is to the youth of Britain.

He has been described as the "best bridge" between the two continents that were once tied together with Scotland as the further bridgehead. He is now to have a conspicuous part in making the history for the next chapter of British America, whose earlier chapters he had written, but also to bring the distinction of his genius to all North American "one of those Scotsmen who represent our English-speaking race at its very best."—New York Times.

HOW TO SWIM

Once more an improvement seems to have been made in the technique of swimming. Steve Forsyth, coach of Ralph Flanagan, the 17-year-old swimmer who has established twenty-five new records since the beginning of the year, announces that his protege has been using a new stroke. It is a variation of the crawl, and its basic difference is described as a two-kick glide between pull and recovery, while the roll of the body is minimized.

The development is particularly interesting because it had been widely imagined that the crawl stroke had already been brought close to its highest possible perfection. In the last decade boys and girls in their teens have been able to swim faster and for longer distances than the strongest men. They have learned to look far more graceful in doing it. Year by year in these late decades minor improvements have been introduced in the swimming stroke almost with the same regularity as the appearance of new automobile models. One big jump was taken in 1873 when J. Trudgeon introduced in England the stroke used by brown by his name. He is thought to have acquired it in South America. About 1900 the crawl stroke was introduced in Australia; the American swimmer Daniels studied it, improved on it, and began breaking records in 1907; and since then various coaches have experimented elaborately with the four-, six-, eight- and ten-beat strokes and with other modifications. While we unfortunately do not know what stroke Caesar was using when he cried "Help me, Cassius, or I sink," it is safe to say that the methods of science have enabled the weaklings of today to swim better than the athletes of yesteryear.

The subject is obviously one for homilies on Brain versus Brawn, Reason versus Instinct, Man versus the Beasts. According to the best authorities, all animals, excepting man, monkeys and the three-toed sloth, either swim naturally or go through the motions of swimming when suddenly immersed in the water. The individual man, uneducated, is helpless. But he applies his rationcinative powers to the matter. He evolves a Plan. Already he is able to handle himself better in the water than most of his fellow-instinct-swimming land animals. A little more thinking, and he may beat the shark at his own game.—New York Times.

SUPPLANT TOWN CRIER

In ancient days, peddlers went from door to door, describing their goods, announcing their wares to prospective purchasers with loud-voiced orations. Today there is a modern medium which does the very same kind of thing and does it much more effectively. That is the newspapers' advertising columns, which take the place of the old town crier of former days, provide a medium of exchange for the merchants and the public and bring sellers and buyers together to their mutual advantage.—Oshawa Times.

IN DAYS LIKE THESE

In days of bickering and strife, the tongues
That seek for selfish ends with clamor long
Let us be thankful for the hearts that keep
The quiet, endless patience of the strong.
When men would place above humanity
The coins that clink their answer in a till,
Let us be thankful for the minds that keep
The balance of justice firm and still.

In hours when faith is broken as a reed
And all the hope of centuries seem nought
Let us be thankful for the steadfast wills
Who guard our heritage of toil and thought
Let us be thankful for the eyes that see,
When days are darkening on every hand,
Beyond the dim horizon of the years
A happier people and a nobler land.

BELIEVE IT, OR NOT, but there is a good deal of truth in the story we are about to relate. Recently the sporting editor told a tale of the dog which was expert at bringing sticks to his master, a well-known merchant of Belleville—one day the dog returned to his master's feet without a stick but coughed up a dollar bill, nicely folded. And so, what? Talk about bringing home the bacon and all that, but there was nothing surprising about the dollar—the dog was a Scotch terrier. But that isn't all, friends. The dog's owner tells it this way. The dog was trained to open the door of the winter porch and one day opened it as violently that about one dollar and a quarter's worth of glass was broken. The dog's owner himself was the Scotch, too, impressed upon the dog the enormity of the crime—so—when the dog returned with the dollar bill in his mouth it was considered by his master as just the first payment on the glass damage. Believe It or Not, Ripley.

WHAT IS THE LIFE EXPECTANCY of a passenger steamer? The great ocean liners, floating palaces of ballrooms, swimming pools, tennis courts and all the discomforts of home, have a rather limited expectancy as they are generally withdrawn from the gill-edged runs after a few years, being replaced by bigger and more elaborate craft. On fresh water expectancy is longer and the Province of Kingston used to operate a fleet of excursions steamers, such as the Empire State, New York, and others, most of which had been built for other parts before New-York-Albany route on the Hudson River years before. There is a passenger-freight steamer still running between Montreal and Kingston, which has at times made Belleville port, the Britannic, built in 1886. The Britannic was built in the Old Country, and was one of the last of the sidewheelers to be seen in Ontario waters. Another craft, still afloat, is the steamboat Kingston, which carried the Prince of Wales, afterwards King Edward VII on his trip from Brockville to Belleville and Toronto in the year 1860. The Kingston is still in service in connection with the activities of the Donnelly Wrecking Company, and is moored in Portsmouth harbor. The Kingston was formerly known as the Corsonwhich in 1860 was considered the last word in steam navigation. Along with the famous old sidewheeler, Passport, the Kingston was owned by Hon. John Hamilton, of Kingston, grandfather of Mrs. E. J. B. Pense, of that city. The Kingston ran between Montreal and Hamilton, calling at Belleville and other intermediate ports. In command of her in 1860 was Captain Clark Hamilton, son of the owner. And so that should start some of the Boys thinking about the Maude, the North King and other craft of the days before gasolene buggies took all the sport out of water trips.

"Ay," said Sandy. "Ah've taken the big step."

"An' what kind o' match did ye mak'?" asked his friends.

Sandy shrugged his shoulders.

"Weel, Donald," he replied pensively, "to tell ye the truth Ah didna do sae weel as Ah expected, but then Ah dinna think my wee lassie did, either."

Legislators at Toronto Facing Momentous Week of Session

BUDGET TUESDAY

Expect The Deficit Will be in Neighborhood of 25 Millions

Toronto, April 1—(CP)— Faced with what promises to be the most momentous week of the current session, Ontario legislators returned to Queen's Park today wondering what decision the government would announce with respect to the Quebec power purchase contracts.

They wondered also what would be disclosed in the budget to be presented tomorrow by Treasurer Mitchell F. Hepburn in his capacity as Provincial Treasurer.

Cabinet had an all-day session Saturday and it was generally understood following the government's decision on power contracts negotiated by the former Hydro-Electric Power Commission.

Assailed early in the Throne Speech debate by Attorney-General A. W. Roebuck as illegal, unenforceable and "void ab initio" the contracts have been before the government since June 7 with no decision reached.

The Premier said Friday, in response to a question from Opposition leader Geo. S. Henry an announcement would be made in the legislature this week. Observers expected a statement then and that it was no definite confirmation it would be forthcoming.

The budget will disclose a deficit, Premier Hepburn has admitted, but size of this is the high light of the forecast. It has been placed as high as $25,000,000 by some speculators.

In addition to the budget and the power announcement, considerable legislation will have to be discussed this week. Mr. Roebuck's Labor legislation, the Industrial Standards Act, has yet to come up for second reading and his police centralization bill, which received second reading will go to committee. It is not known whether the measure will be before committee this week.

Contracts Under Fire

Future contracts with four Quebec power companies will be decided by the government's announcement of policy.

The companies with which the commission negotiated the contracts were: The Gatineau Power Company, the Beauharnois Light Heat and Power Company, The Ottawa Valley Power Company and the James MacLaren Company. By an agreement of June 14, 1931, the commission appointed the trustee for the Mines MacLaren Company to the MacLaren-Quebec Company of the rights arising out of the contract between the commission and the James MacLaren Company.

These contracts were negotiated between 1926 and 1930 during the administration of Former Premier G. Howard Ferguson, now Ontario's High Commissioner to Great Britain. Chairman of the Hydro Commission at that time was C. A. Magrath.

The other contracts were for 40 years. In 1929 the Beauharnois contract for 250,000 horse-power at $15 a horse-power was signed. This was followed by the Ottawa Valley contract for 96,000 horse-power at the same price in February 1930 and the MacLaren contract for 129,000 horse-power, also at the same price, in December of that year.

Since the first contracts were signed the commission has paid Gatineau, Beauharnois and MacLaren-Quebec $22,000,000. Mr. Roebuck said in his Hydro address and he estimated when the contracts terminated the payments would have reached $329,226,006.

JUDGE J. A. VALIN NAMED GUARDIAN

Will Act With Three Others in Guarding Quintuplets

Toronto, April 1—Three guardians to-day protect the lives and fortunes on His Majesty's special wards, the five Dionne babies, Attorney-General Roebuck announced today by Hon. David Croll, Minister of Welfare that in addition to the father of the quintuplets, Oliva Dionne, and the family doctor who brought them into the world, Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe, the third guardian would be Judge J. A. Valin of North Bay, French-Canadian jurist, who is widely known throughout the north country.

Under the "Quints Act" which the Legislature approved last week and to which the Lieutenant-Governor gave Royal Assent on Thursday, cabinet is empowered to delegate immediate supervision of the babies to a board of guardians.

Judge Valin came to Northern Ontario 43 years ago to assume judicial powers over the almost limitless district defined vaguely as Nipissing, Temiskaming and Cochrane. He travelled by dog-sled and canoe to conduct his semi-annual courts in such settlements as New Liskeard and Haileybury, now a brief train-ride from North Bay. Though past retirement age, the veteran jurist, now 78 carries on and is loved and respected by all residents of the vast area. Judge Valin was born in Ottawa and practised law there for 11 years before his appointment to the bench.

HUNTER DROWNS IN RIDEAU RIVER

Believed He Suffered Cramps When Dumped Into Cold Water

Kingston, April 1—When his canoe was upset on the Rideau River about a half-mile below Bell's Island late Saturday, Harry Lane, 18, of Kingston was drowned. His companion, George Oakes, 18 also of Kingston, was saved after standing on a sandbar in the river for more than an hour.

The two were on a hunting trip. The canoe tipped without warning, Oakes said, and Lane drowned shortly after being tossed in the icy waters of the river. He seemed to be in difficulties, and it was believed he suffered cramps. His body has not yet been recovered.

The canoe upset between two sand-bars, created by dredging operations on the river. Oakes succeeded in swimming to one of the bars, about ten feet away, and called for help to the mainland, about 150 yards off. Donaldson Davis, Flood and Irvine Graham rescued Oakes.

SECURITY PACT WITHOUT GERMANY IS AGREED UPON

Hope That Germany Would Join Pact is Expressed

EDEN LEAVES MOSCOW

On Way to Warsaw to Further Agreements For Europe's Safety

Moscow, April 1—(CP)—Anthony Eden sped toward Warsaw today in quest of further bulwarks for peace leaving behind in Moscow an agreement, with Joseph Stalin, that the nations of Europe should build for security whether Germany collaborates or not.

A joint communique issued just prior to the British diplomat's departure late last night disclosed, that he and the Soviet dictator concurred, that the Anglo-French peace plan concluded in London should be made the basis for preserving Europe's stability.

Loyalty to obligations" as members of the League of Nations was offered as the guiding rule in mutual relations sent his "spirit of collaboration" between France and Great Britain.

The statement said the conferees believed it was now "more than ever necessary to pursue the endeavor to promote the building up of collective security in Europe as contemplated in the Anglo-French Communique of February 3 and in conformity with the principles of the League of Nations."

This statement was taken by observers as meaning Captain Eden would tell Britain should participate in any collective security arrangement even though Germany remains aloof.

No Isolation

The Communique emphasized security and mutual assistance pacts and said: "Should any encroachment of any State, which was taken as a reference to Germany, upset the basis of security the statement said, would be welcomed as participants.

Maxim Litvinoff, Soviet Commissar for foreign affairs in bidding Captain Eden farewell at the railroad station, said, "I wish you every success, for our success is our success."

Eden clasped the hand of his host and replied, "the same to you."

Then the Briton strode down the red plush carpet to his railway coach and departed for the Polish capital where he was scheduled to arrive some time tonight.

As Eden left the city, the Soviet press came forth with another critical reference to Germany. Michael Tukhachevsky, Vice Commissar for Defence, in an article in the newspaper Pravda, declared Germany would have an army of 849,000 by the summer exceeding the French army by 40 per cent and almost equaling the forces army in size.

He charged Hitler with "lulling France to sleep," with anti-Soviet war talk in the hope France would not realize her own peril.

PAPERS PREDICT TITLE FOR BUCHAN

Likely Will be Raised to Peerage Before Coming to Canada

London, April 1—(CP Cable)—Two newspapers predicted John Buchan announced as next Governor-General of Canada would be elevated to the peerage, Mr. Buchan himself said a newspaper statement that he had chosen a title was "quite absurd."

The Sunday Express and the Weekly Dispatch predicted his elevation to the peerage. The former said he would be titled Lord Buchanmuir. The Dispatch said his most likely choice was Lord Tweedsmuir.

Mr. Buchan said: "The grant of a peerage is entirely at the discretion of His Majesty. The matter has not yet been raised. Therefore I have not given thought to the question of a title." His attention was drawn by newspaper reports he had reached a decision on the matter.

Thirty years ago, said the Observer, it was predicted Mr. Buchan would either write a history of Calvinism or become a cabinet minister. "He achieved a brilliant alternative in literature and in politics he has now surpassed the other prediction," the paper said.

It would not be enough for Canada if he was merely a man of letters but his ample credentials include great business experience and the high Commissionership of the Church of Scotland."

A WANT-AD will FIND IT!

● All the countless thousands who buy newspapers every day are potential customers of those who offer goods for sale to the consuming public.

Practically every merchant in Canada will lose customers in 1935—a law of business. This loss must be replaced or his business will die. The trader who loses customers, from a longer point, can find them again and increase his turnover by good merchandising linked with advertising in the daily newspapers.

People are reading daily newspapers as never before, not from curiosity, but from need to know today the best things offered to supply their daily wants.

Lost markets, which are only other words for lost customers, are now being regained by you or acquired by others. You owe it to yourself and to your business to keep in touch through the newspapers every day with the Canadian buying public.

Saved Months of Suffering

"I am 31 years old, married and have five children. I am writing Mrs. Lloyd Wilkins, of Bay of Quinte, Ont., "My face and limbs were so badly swollen I was unable to wear my shoes. I suffered with terrible headaches and had no appetite. I finally took a friend's advice and got two boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills. When I had taken them the swelling had gone down and I felt a great difference in every way. Dodd's Kidney Pills have saved me months of suffering. I also find them excellent for the children."

Deep Breathing Puts Roses on the Cheeks

(The Beauty Box)

By HELEN FOLLETT

Shallow breathing causes aging, and is responsible for many blemishes. Most women are not aware of the fact that shallow breathing is a reason for sallow complexions, but there is no reason why other women aren't harmonious, but just kept trim of outline with foundation garments that are cut after reasonable specifications.

We're not advocating fastening for one of the Dempsey style, but we do think that a gal carries her clothes more beautifully, is healthier and stronger, if she puts up a good front and pushes out the lower cells of her lungs with fresh air. Feeding oxygen into the lungs is the greatest aid of growing roses in the cheeks, putting starlight in the eyes and redness in the lips.

Stand erect, chest up, hands on hips, inhale through the nostrils, exhale quickly through the lips, sending the air out with a rush. This ventilating exercise is what every woman needs. It cuts down the cosmetic budget.

Copper-colored hair, a rare and glorious blessing, is inclined to darken as a gal gets older.

There is a way to brighten it. Best to have an expert do it, but if the old pocketbook happens to be lean, it can be done at home.

Mix three tablespoons of pure powdered Egyptian henna. Don't let the compound, that's scientifically entirely different. Add a little boiling water, to make a paste the consistency of cold cream, add one teaspoon of peroxide. Keep the mixture in a hot bowl for a while.

Part the hair at various places, apply the paste with a small brush. Don't spread very far down on the hair shafts. The color changes as hair fades. Let remain on seven minutes. Wash out with soap suds, rinse thoroughly.

The Hegburn brag seems to be growing more and more popular. It is quaint, but does not make for a beautiful bob. It means keeping the fringe soft and silky by frequent shampooing and much care. Some girls who like it shape it by razor sheer desperation they dance with each other.

Leila writes:

"You know, Miss Fairfax, that's an open confession—you can't get a boy friend."

All normal girls want to be popular. It's the most natural and reasonable of wishes. Let's explore this for the subject, and why it is that some girls have to dance with each other when the music gets into their toes, and others have so many "dates" that dancing is just an exchange of partners.

To purse this question: Is popularity a gift of nature? Are some girls born popular? If not, how does one acquire that gift of the gods?

In the first place, it's never the sluggish, selfish girl who is popular — unless she happens to be dizzily beautiful, and then all rules fail. The live-wire girl, full of vitality, resource and common sense, is the popular.

TIPS FOR GIRLS WHO WANT TO BE POPULAR

So many letters come to me from girls who tell me they are not popular. They go to dances, but no one asks them to dance. Then the music gets into their toes and the sheer desperation they dance with each other.

Leila writes:

"You know, Miss Fairfax, that's an open confession—you can't get a boy friend."

All normal girls want to be popular. It's the most natural and reasonable of wishes. Let's explore this for the subject, and why it is that some girls have to dance with each other when the music gets into their toes, and others have so many "dates" that dancing is just an exchange of partners.

To purse this question: Is popularity a gift of nature? Are some girls born popular? If not, how does one acquire that gift of the gods?

In the first place, it's never the sluggish, selfish girl who is popular — unless she happens to be dizzily beautiful, and then all rules fail. The live-wire girl, full of vitality, resource and common sense, is the popular.

sense is not to be rated highly in considering this question. Some girls are so utterly bereft of it that they stumble from one blunder to another, and retire from the scene.

Warmheartedness counts immensely, too. People love a girl who has sympathy for others, and who is not always thinking of herself. Be modest and she is pleased to call her "sensitiveness."

A resourceful girl is always popular—one who can rescue a party that's going on the rocks from sheer boredom, and can suggest a clever trick or scheme that will make a go of it. That's much better than sitting around criticizing and saying how dull the party is.

The ability to do things, especially cook things, is so highly important that perhaps I should have put that first. A girl who can turn out a good supper from a chafing dish or a two-burner electric grill, or even the old family range, is bound to be in demand by the stock-look-and-listen crowd, who can only follow after her and never originate.

I knew a girl very well, who married a man in the foreign service because she knew how to make perfect coffee, and scramble eggs to the queen's taste. The man knew he had found and could afford a helpmate. He felt that a charming girl who could get up an impromptu supper, after a show or on Sunday evening, would be a great asset in his career. And she has been that — for he is now in the Diplomatic Corps!

A good dancer is always a social success, and the girl who plays a good game of bridge or tennis gets more invitations than the young lady who makes for the nearest sofa and just sits.

The girl who is clever with clothes is apt to be popular. She's a credit to the young man who takes her out, and a decorative figure at any party. She can make over an old dress so that it will look as well, almost, as a new one.

And last of the popular girl is never sentimental or tiresomely personal in her relations with other people. She does not tell you about her own or her family's troubles. She's agreeable.

And please remember this — she doesn't say spiteful things about other girls, or act as if she could qualify for president of the Cat Club.

Teach Child Tidy Habits When Young

By LISA GRENELLE

Alice's room always looked like a pig pen, and repeated scolding brought little improvement. Alice was just not naturally tidy, for order does not seem important to her.

A habit of order might have been developed in Alice at five, possibly three. In those early years she should have been taught to put each toy back in its place as soon as she had finished playing with it, until a sense of order had become instinctive with her.

This early discipline, however, had not been forced upon Alice. It was always so much quicker and easier for mother to tidy up. So Alice, at 12, had no sense of order, no pride in things in their place. Tidying up was not only distasteful to her, but difficult. She had never developed a system.

Punishment or Reward

To make a child perform a task which appears to him unnecessary, difficult and distasteful, takes some manner of persuasion more effective than words. Neither punishment, of the promise of reward.

Punishment by withdrawing privileges is permissive and often effective, but reward judiciously offered and difficult to attain is, I think, far sounder.

There are two reasons for this. One is that if a child is working toward a desired reward he will work eagerly, his heart in his task. While if a child is forced to a distasteful accomplishment through threat of punishment he works unwillingly and does as little as possible.

In the second place, labor accepted through threat and fear of punishment puts the authority (the parent) on the opposing side. On the other hand, labor inspired by hope of reward places the authority on the allied side. A child's attitude toward a parent offering a reward is one of warm gratitude. The offer of a reward knocks down the barriers between parent and child and it dissipates the child's defenses.

No Easy Reward

A child should not, however, be rewarded too easily, or for a duty that is his in the first place. Occasionally he may be rewarded for a task performed with unusual dispatch, cheerfulness and thoroughness.

The reward itself should also serve a constructive purpose. In the delightful story of the Little Red Hen, of course, be something the child himself very much desires. But a child's desires are many and may always be guided, as they do, to some extent. If, for instance, Janis would like either a box of candy or a paint box, and her pal Jean prefers candy, instead of making her sick will afford a valuable method of self-expression.

Try to choose from among the things desired one which will prove a healthy occupation, or stimulate the ambition of the child.

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

HEMSTITCHED

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Please tell me the correct way to serve coffee when one has friends in to lunch. I have a very lovely silver coffee service, with a large tray. Does one stack cups and saucers on the tray or on the table besides the tray? 2. Are small single lunch cloths instead of linen table cloths in good taste?

A.

1. Why not serve your after-luncheon coffee in the living-room? And especially since you have such a beautiful service for doing this. It's a gracious kind of service, this serving of the coffee in the living-room, so much more charming and distinctive than serving it at table. It "promotes" conversation, is very easy and thoroughly enjoyable, and really easier than serving it at table.

Have everything ready, before your luncheon, on the tray — the cream pitcher, if you are going to offer cream (and most people do, nowadays, although it isn't necessary); the loaf sugar in the sugar bowl (or white or cream-colored or plain shaded bits of rock candy, very popular nowadays, and very festive-looking); the small after-dinner cups and saucers, placed separately, not in twos or piles, and the after-dinner coffee spoons. Then all you have to do is pour the coffee into the coffee pot, and bring your tray, or have the tray brought, into the living-room, placed on the coffee table—and you're ready to serve.

Hanging on to the mode in the frock with a fringe hung gracefully on it, a new dress while ever made has a white silk fringe forming a border at the hem. Fringe goes on to a spiral cascade down the side and back of his lovely evening frock.

A nice companion for a blue suit is a blouse of white georgette with wrist frills and Jabot in soft white lace of chantilly type. The frills show outside the jacket sleeves.

Lots of invitations to important parties mean lots of smart evening frocks. Adding a printed bow of effective is a frock of violet blue shiffon with a cape arrangement of ruffles in taffeta that exactly matches the chiffon.

Spring nights bring out smart fur capes. An innovation is a waistlength cape of ermine with a fitted front section and dolman cape sleeves. It is lined with gathered white chiffon.

Sailors are rough, straws of rough surface being in demand for this type of hat. A new model is in rough loosely woven leghorn straw, with the lavender tone of this shade being brought out by the bolting band around the crown, which is in deep lavender.

On the courts at Palm Beach one tennis fan wears a tennis frock of white linen that is backless but has an outward flare with a Peter-Pan collar and four little red buttons. Red and white striped leather makes a narrow belt.

A Thought for Today

"And Jesus went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the moneychangers, and the seats of them that sold doves."

—St. Matthew, 21:12.

—just the kind I love. Nice and roomy, and lots of compartments. You're a dear, and thank you so much for this lovely gift."

HEARTS of thin-blooded people beat too fast

Test cases show that this condition is benefitted by treatment which supplies haematin (blood iron)

Heart, breath and blood work together to support life. Each has its own particular work to do. But when the blood becomes too thin and not able to carry on its purpose well, the heart is quicker and has to work harder, and faster is order to help the blood. This, of course, should not be allowed to continue or serious consequences are likely to develop. And yet, in most cases, this condition is relieved by comparatively simple treatment.

CONVINCING RESULTS IN 30 DAYS

A number of persons all suffering more or less from this trouble, pale blood, were taken in hand to demonstrate the value of a certain remedy. Before treatment each one had a blood test which revealed exactly how poor their blood was. Then each person was told to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills (called pink because of their pink appearance) for 30 days and return for another blood test. The results were even better than expected. In the case of one young woman the improvement shown was astonishing.

At the time of the first test she was run-down, devitalized and anaemic. Her blood had only 40 parts of iron-nutriment whereas it should have had 90 or 95. And her red blood corpuscles, instead of being up to 4½ million, had fallen to 3?1 No wonder she always felt tired!

But look at the change at the end of 30 days! Her iron-nutriment or haematin was increased to 84 parts, while her red corpuscles were up to 54 count! Certainly better than normal. What splendid evidence this is of the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as a tonic and blood-builder.

HOW THE TREATMENT WORKS

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills supplies iron in a form which the system can change into haematin or blood iron. This enables the blood to pick up more oxygen and aids the system in the formation of more red corpuscles. As the blood becomes enriched again it does its work better and both heart beats and breathing slow down to normal and the person feels well once more.

If you or any other member of your family are suffering from rundown, anaemic conditions, look "pale-faced" and pale, feel dizzy at times or have a slight palpitation, don't expect the condition to get better of its own accord. The Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which by actual test have proved their worth. They're safe to give to children as well as adults and have been favourably known for 40 years. Full size box 50c.

BRANTFORD ROOFING

Once upon a time it took a lot of effort to replace a worn-out roof. And after the job was finally finished a host of bills would come in from all sorts of people who had all had a hand in the matter. For that reason, people used to believe that patching was a whole lot easier and pretty nearly as efficient.

Today, however, there is a different story to tell. You deal with one person—you pay one bill—you get a new roof complete, without any trouble to yourself. All you do is telephone us, select the Brantford Roofing pattern and color scheme you like best and we do the rest. There isn't a litter for weeks on the front lawn, there is no nasty, slush disposal of old shingles, there is no danger of sudden rain squalls damaging interior decorations while the new roof is being applied.

We Give a 10 year Guarantee with our Roofs. You can pay by our Financial Plan if Desired.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE BELLE

"THE SCARLET PIMPERNEL"

Romantic and Melodramatic are Blended in Popular Film

Another triumph for Alexander Korda is "The Scarlet Pimpernel," showing at the Belle theatre until Tuesday. Here is another picture which seems certain to be among the year's best. "The Scarlet Pimpernel" has been tremendously popular as a novel and as a play, so there are thousands of people to be disappointment if the picture to be true up to their expectations. But those thousands of which we speak will have nothing of which to complain in the film version. It is amazingly true to the book and yet in spite of the story being familiar to the picture seems fresh and fresh. Leslie Howard one of the best actors appearing in the movies today, has the finest role of his career as Sir Percy Blakeney, Beautiful Merle Oberon is charming as Lady Blakeney, and the former Canadian, Raymond Massey, is positively threatening as the dark and sinister Chauvelin. Besides the excellent cast, in which there is also included Nigel Bruce, the costumes and settings are gorgeous and the photography admirable.

"The Scarlet Pimpernel" leaves the writer vainly groping for superlatives, longing to find one that has not been used. The value by Leslie Howard in advertisements, for the same reason. Leslie Howard is perfect. It unquestionably the finest picture of this or any other year. Certainly deserves the place for the best film produced anywhere during 1934, if Frank Parker's pleasing tenor of Jack Benny's Jello radio program, and a dainty blonde in a full color entitled "Shoemaker and the Elves," The entire program will be broadcast at 7.30 o'clock on Tuesday matinee and evening.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Mills of the Gods"

May Robson Given Big Final Part-former Actress in This Dramatic Story!

Out of the dynamic, present-day clash of industrial strife and the attendant conviction that the leisure, pleasure-seeking class is on the wane, comes a stirring romantic drama called "Mills of the Gods". The film, which opened today at the Capitol Theatre, stars May Robson in a role which provides her with the finest opportunity for a dramatic, emotional characterization since "Lady for a Day".

In the supporting roles, Fay Wray and James Blakely turn in interesting performances. Miss Wray looks lovely and is her usual charming self. As the leading actress, Victor Joy is excellent. He gives a realistic and faithful portrayal of a difficult character for which he deserves the greatest praise. Raymond Walburn, former New York stage star, is equally as good as the sergeant-at-arms.

The direction by Roy William Neill is keen per. He has caught the mood and spirit of the time in his exciting, brisk-paced production, handling vividness and conviction to the gripping story.

Briefly, "Mills of the Gods" tells the tale of a large industrial plant caught in the grip of the depression. Dan Smith, the retired head of the mills, calls in her worthless brood of children to help him run the business over its trying period. Instead of aiding their desperate mother, they blunder into a situation of labor riots and threats of violence. The climax comes with the unforgettable entertainment which "Mills of the Gods" affords.

"The Prisoner of Zenda, Inc." A romance of a conceited, colorful priestfighter, is an unusually thrilling drama with plenty of punch, both literally and figuratively, and with a unique underlying love story.

The story is set in the atmosphere of the squared circle, the glamorous boxing and wrestling emporiums, and deals with the characters who follow the fight profession, from the cheap pugs and roustabouts to the high pressure promoters and ring champions.

Pat O'Brien heads a cast of all-star fighters, flashy fighter, with plenty of flash, considerable class and "fun punch", but whose fistic talents vanity leads him to believe that he is actually knocking out the ar-

Mrs. Hall is a widow with a family of four children. She has no trade or profession to provide for her support. Only Patsy, the youngest, is left at home with Mrs. Hall. Patsy's wife would like someone who knows both her husband and the child, preferably somebody who is hopeful to make enough of a stake to send them to a small business.

She manages to keep her patches, husband in hand until Claire Dodd, in the role of a society beauty of fashion, takes the fighter up as a diversion and leads him to believe he is a winner with the ladies. The wife wages a losing fight in the typical affair, but sticks with unfailing constancy to her man until his eyes are finally opened by an incident that brings about a smashing climax.

There is plenty of fighting, in addition to the love story, for there is Jimmy Wilde, former flyweight champ of the world, who is also a good actor.

By These Tokens Ye Know . . . .

How many know that in the year 1840, as the ritual has it, plying the Atlantic with a tonnage of 34,000, Cunard's fleet of 1,000 breadth, seem 55 feet, depth 30 feet and length of 692 feet.

However many or how few know it, Samuel H. Tickell knows it, because he has a token purchased from Cunard, dated 1890. Tickell, Belleville. This medal, seventy-five years old, proposes its glitter unabated.

This is but one of the many relics of the past preserved by Mr. Tickell. He has a silver gold-old token commemorates the opening of the Middlebrook & Glasgow Railway February 13, 1842, which is more than ninety-three years ago. It is an interesting piece of the great viaduct over the Valley of the Almond near Middlebrook.

Celluloid buttons worn in the Almond jubilee year of the late Queen Victoria, who were sold on the streets, souvenirs, streets and in shops are also in Mr. Tickell's collection.

One of her two days spent in ortland was at a murder trial, where she studied American trial methods. She is a law student in England and a graduate of Oxford University.

ENGLAND LEADS THE WAY IN CLEARING AWAY SLUMS

Slum clearance and re-housing is not all talk and no action in England, as these exclusive Central Press Canadian pictures show. The two photos illustrate graphically what can be done to alleviate living conditions in the poorer sections of large cities. No longer are families crowded into small quarters, devoid of sanitation light and cleanliness. The picture at LEFT shows a condition that England is setting about to wipe out. Every year, for the next five years, 53,200 homes will be destroyed and 57,000 new homes and apartments will be built. The photo at RIGHT shows an apartment house, already occupied, which enjoys plenty of light and air space and which rents inexpensively enough for the lowest wage-earner. This is made possible through government subsidies. Sociological experts in England declare that crime, disease, and mortality are greatly reduced under these new living conditions. It would seem to be another instance where England leads the world in reform; for Canada and the United States, while movements of this kind are being pushed, lag well behind when it comes to actually taking action. This is the first of two layouts on this subject. To-morrow's pictures will show the marvellous effect of releasing children from slums to clean, healthy playgrounds and home conditions.

BRITISH NAVY HOLDS MANOEUVRES

With a new crisis in Europe, England is pepping up her naval and air forces, in a recent mimic "war" the Home fleet and the Mediterranian fleet engaged in pitched battle for eight days. ## REYNOLDSTOWN WINS GRAND NATIONAL Reynoldstown, thoroughbred, owned by Major N. Furlong of England, winner of the 96th running of the Grand National Steeplechase at Aintree. Golden Miller, the outstanding favorite failed half-way through the contest when Jockey Wilson was thrown.

SHIRLEY SETS THE PACE FOR EASTER STYLES

Not only does darling Shirley Temple set the style in child acting, but also the styles in children's clothes. Here Shirley shows three beautiful models which are included in her Easter wardrobe. At the LEFT is a lacquer-red batiste dress with white polka dots. The collar is of white polka dotted Swiss, embroidered in coin-size red dots and piped with red batiste cord. The same idea is repeated on the puffed sleeves. This dress can be made for $1.50. In the CENTRE Miss Temple wears a charmingly-pleated dress of georgette, topped by a lace collar. At the RIGHT Shirley shows a hand-embroidered French dimity dress, with hand-drawn work, fashioned over each shoulder with tiny mother-of-pearl buttons.

HAS TWO HUBBIES

MARJORIE CRAMM

Life is a bit of a problem for Marjorie Cramm of Chatham, Ontario, who made the mistake of acquiring one too many husbands. Married in 1932, she quarrelled with her spouse and headed for Detroit, where she met hubby No. 2. On a trip back to Windsor, hubby No. 1 tried to prevail upon her to return. Meanwhile, No. 2, alarmed at her absence, notified police and the damage was done. Now she faces charges of bigamy in Windsor police court.

$9,000,000 FALL

GERRY WILSON

When he fell from the back of Golden Miller, favorite in the Grand National, Gerry Wilson stated that his horse refused to jump at one of the smaller jumps on the famous course at Aintree. A London newspaper, publishing pictures of the fall, declared that Golden Miller did not seem to hesitate for a fraction of a second at the jump. If Golden Miller had won the race, it is estimated the bookies, or bettakers in England would have had to pay out more than $9,000,000. Golden Miller was the shortest-priced favorite in the history of the Grand National.

POLISH PREMIER

In a series of swift moves, Marshal Josef Pilsudski of Poland, inaugurated a virtual Fascist dictatorship over his country. The parliament drafted a new constitution, on semi-Fascist lines, stripped the cabinet headed by Premier Janus Jedrzejewicz of its powers. The marshal is said to be planning to instal Colonel Walery Slawek (above), as his new Premier, Slawek however, would obey the dictums of Pilsudski.

Guardians of the Desert

By TOM GILL

The sun was almost at the horizon and losing no time, Sub Pablo stepped to the firing line. Again he took careful aim, his close-set eyes fixed with a kind of eager intensity on the target. Unhurriedly he fired, aimed, fired again, and after each shot a bullet leaped high into the air. Four times the bullet found its goal. For the last time he aimed and fired, then swore a bitter oath —one silver dollar still remained. But it was wonderfully good shooting, and well content with the result, Pablo, most eagerly to avoid, extend their bets, offering two to one that Lowell, with the added distance and in the fading light, could not duplicate their champion's feat.

Every eye was fastened now on those two immobile figures, every nerve strained and tense. For in those last moments the match had resolved itself into more than a contest between two men. Individually, yet very surely, it had come to typify the struggle between those two factions fighting for their very lives there in Sheriff Barr's ring. They were symbols, these men —champions of opinion greater than their own.

Unnoticed by them, the crowd had crowded forward until now they formed two solid walls of humanity, leaving only a wide lane stretching between, and that, the target.

"Be better take his time this round if he wants to tie that score," one whispered, then lapsed into a silent as Dick stepped to the line.

But Pablo still stood directly before him, and as Dick approached the other's lips twisted.

"You're licked, Yankee," he muttered in a low voice. "You're licked and you know it."

Dick slipped the empty clip from his automatic. "Step aside, Bull," he said quietly.

Pablo never budged. Each moment's delay in that fostering light was counting heavily in his favor. Dick took one step and suddenly Pablo found himself looking into Lowell's narrowed eyes and heard a restrained but dangerous voice saying, "Move, Pablo. Pronto!"

For one silent second Pablo contemplated those steady eyes—and moved.

CHAPTER TWENTY-FIVE

Inserting a full clip of cartridges in his automatic, Dick faced the targets, and instantly every figure in that dense line of spectators stiffened, every eye turned toward those five silver coins. Unseen behind that breathless audience Nora stood on tip toe, both hands tight against her throat, her face shielding in what might have been a prayer.

Now Dick's arm was raised, and now the gun glinted on that leveled barrel, and five bits of metal were leaped from the muzzle. Five rapid shots roared out, and at the last one a low groan escaped.

Spellbound, held by an astounded, unbelieving silence, no one spoke or moved, then suddenly the tension snapped. Never in the long history of the cavalry past had it thrilled to such a shout as split the air. Pablo's men, in the heat and fever of their horses, fired their guns, shouting a chorus of hoarse cries above them, raising a very beclamor of rejoicing while they raced up and down the parade ground in an ecstasy of uncontrollable delight.

At once Dick found himself the centre of a whirling, whooping circle of elated cowhands who reached down to shake his hand and pound his shoulder, shouting their wholehearted approval, then, wheeling, were gone again, spurring their mad, joyous way toward Verde.

"Magnificent shooting, Lovell!" O'Hearn seized Dick's hand, pressed it, then walked rapidly away while Pablo, his mouth set in an ugly scowl, moved wrathfully to his horse and without a glance of those bloodshot eyes at his crestfallen comrades, rode out toward the Barrier.

By now the rest of the onlookers were moving toward the gate, and alone at last, Dick's expectant eyes turned to Nora, standing with Mrs. O'Hearn on the edge of the parade ground. Why was she keeping so deliberately apart from him? Across that intervening distance their eyes met, and his cheeks flushed with quick pleasure as she took a step toward him just before O'Hearn reached her. But the officer, pointing toward the quarters, offered his arm; and smiling, Nora turned and walked slowly away at his side.

Alone in the fading light, Dick watched the two figures pass from view while little by little the thrill of victory within him died. To the west a flaming sun was touching the far horizon, and on the quiet air a bugle sounded the first notes of Retreat. Instantly even the officers and soldier ballad in salute. And Dick, uncovering stood at attention, slowly the great flag fluttered down. Overwhelmingly the realisation came to him how much he had wanted her outstretched hand of glad approval and the smiling words, "Well done." In spite of himself a sense of loss and loneliness laid its chill touch upon him leaving him irresolute—undecided whether to follow Nora or turn back to the ranch. Once his eyes raised to the purpling skies, then lowered to the ground. Before him almost at his feet, lay the little piles of empty cartridge shells, and idly he stooped and raised one in his hand.

What did O'Hearn mean to her? Listlessly turning the shining cylinder, his aimless eyes contemplating that empty shell. Was that why she had been so aloof, so inaccessible?

Then suddenly his whole body stiffened and with a choked cry he bent lower over the cartridge. For there where the rim had directly bestruck, a tiny triangular notch stood out, sharply jagged at the upper end.

It was a silent and constrained dinner party that night in the O'Hearn quarters. The captain himself talked fitfully, and Nora with a kind of forced animation helped for a time keep the pretence of conversation alive. But it was all a labor performance.

Stub, always ill at ease with women, in embarrassed silence leaving to Barnes the task of entertaining their hostess—a task forcibly made too difficult, since Mrs. O'Hearn openly prided herself on a fund of easy and continuous small talk.

Only Pablo started her mouth when he walked away and left it." Stub meditated morosely.

Dick, engrossed by his discovery sat silent and preoccupied, still seeing in retrospect that cartridge from Bull Pablo's gun. His head was still throbbing, but after the first spasm of red anger passed, his brain worked coldly, with a quiet, steady logic, and strangely, even now Dick felt no overwhelming hatred of Pablo, no sudden resolve to put an end to the killer's sinister career. With perfect clarity he realized that Pablo himself was only an incident, a tool of Nicholas Sarl. Dick's fight was against something far greater than any one cog in Sarl's machine—it was against the directing head itself. Nothing must swerve him from that. Defeat Sarl at any cost would be folly. Turn to settle with Pablo then.

Barnes, sitting and eating at the candlelit table, and it was characteristic of him that once having reached his decision, he could put and give himself up to the scene about him.

For a time with ironic amusement he watched Mrs. O'Hearn's appraising glances at Nora and realized she was being weighed very deliberately in the light of a prospective daughter-in-law. It was equally evident that the captain had cast all weighing to the winds, for he watched the girl constantly, attending on every word, his eyes taking in every feature, and already a protective, almost proprietary attitude began to tinge his bearing toward her.

Barnes, as usual, was silent, watching the people around him with that quiet dreamer's eye of h's until, dinner finished, Mrs. O'Hearn led the way to the porch that as two headlights flashed from, down the road and a long, powerful car came to a stop directly before the commandant's quarters. To Dick's surprise, Sarl himself stepped out and leisurely walked up the steps. His ready smile was never more genial than now, and as his eyes met Dick in the little group he walked directly to Dick.

"Congratulations on your magnificent shooting," he began. "It was incredible — old Pablo is positively heart-broken." The lanky eyes roamed slowly about. "I came over to pay my respects to Captain O'Hearn. It's a pleasure to find him among friends."

Dick's unsmiling smile was equally urbane, and turning to Mrs. O'Hearn he said, "Let me present to you the strong man of the Southwest, Mr. Nicholas Sarl."

Sarl bowing low over the woman's hand, and Dick caught a flood of delighted little notes, evidently intended to convey a message of welcome. With O'Hearn, Sarl shook hands cordially, then bowed formally to Will and his sister, but at his eyes caught sight of Stub, leisurely smoking in a corner, a fleeting gleam of momentary hatred in kindled and quickly died away. In the next moment Dick realized Sarl already knew who Stub was, and Copper Canyon had failed.

Even so, Stub would be a most powerful and implacable enemy.

Accepting a cigarette from Mrs. O'Hearn, Sarl seated himself and for a time chatted with the captain. But at last he brought the talk to the irrigation work, describing his painting the picture of the changes, it would bring to the desert, then with a little frown, Sarl added, "My men at the dam are being intimidated by disgruntled ranchers. Of course, the officials of Verde should protect them, but they don't. Armed conflict may arise at anytime, and if it does, our local authorities will be absolutely helpless. Could I count on the help of the United States cavalry in such a crisis?"

Dick's eyes met Barnes' glance of understanding. Sarl was not only seeking to have O'Hearn align himself against the Verde ranchers, but chose this means of showing his strength with the military authorities.

CHAPTER TWENTY-SIX

"The military is never invoked until civil authority breaks down," O'Hearn answered. "In no case would I be called on unless the Governor asked Washington for Federal aid in a serious emergency."

Sarl was listening intently. "Then if the Governor should make such a request, even before an emergency, would the War Department comply?"

"That would be unusual—but I think it would comply."

Sarl's smile showed that he was well content and had no intention of pressing the matter. He threw away his cigarette and rose, but on the steps he turned. "You know," he reflected, "only today I was thinking that our local authorities already there signs of breaking down. In a country that calls itself civilized, outrages like Bull Barnes' abduction ought not be possible. Let's hope we'll soon run down the guilty ones."

Cheerily Dick answered, "I'm certain we shall. That fellow in the Verde jail may have to do a lot of talking before he sees the outside world again."

Beneath his dark moustache Sarl's white teeth gleamed, a smile that reminds me. It's just that sort of thing that makes me wonder how much our civil authorities are worth in times like this. You see, as a matter of fact, Verde itself has not that a band of masked, armed men had entered the jail and forced the sheriff to release the prisoner. I'm afraid he'll never talk."

Again those slightly narrowed eyes took in the silent, thunderstruck group. Only Nick Barnes shook his head. "Really that sort of thing should never happen in a civilized community."

Four times during the week that followed Dick and Stub rode between the Barrier in every one line of "big ditch".

Explaining briefly what was required of Stub, and beginning a little below the dam, Dick ran a line straight down toward Sarl Barnier's north end. They worked rapidly, making no attempt at concealment, and so far the workmen, knowing Lowell had accepted his position of foreman from Verde—on a numbered with the Governor.

But even at the end of the first day's work Dick had grave misgivings. "I don't like it," he told Stub. "At first the figures of Sarl's survey and mine checked exactly, but in the last hour we've been going farther and farther apart."

He relapsed into a puzzled silence and during the days that followed made no further comment.

Slowly the long line of figures in Dick's notebook grew, and as the work lengthened on the last day of their work, Dick, behind his light mountain transit, brought the survey to a close. Since early morning they had labored, and now, wearied by the long strain and beaten by a cold north wind, Dick stood with numbed fingers, making the last pencil notes. A little apart, Stub folded the surveying rod, his face dark with weather, and Dick with which he always greeted these mystical and obscure jobs. Although quick to catch the simple instructions for his own purpose of it all lay shrouded in mystery to enlighten him.

But now the work was done, and shouldering the surveying rod, Stub looked up impatiently. "Are we be announced "I've been packing

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN Helped Miss Kesterke

We quote from her letter: "Three years ago, I became constipated. I tried many laxatives. But as soon as I got used to each kind, I began to get the same trouble.

"Last summer I was on my vacation. They served Kellogg's ALL-BRAN. I just loved it. I eat Kellogg's ALL-BRAN every morning, and ever since I have not had to take any more laxatives."—Miss Margaret Kesterke. Address on request.

Due to insufficient "bulk" is made.

Tests show Kellogg's ALL-BRAN supplies "bulk" to aid elimination. ALL-BRAN is also rich in vitamin B and iron.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is gentle. It retains digestion better than the fiber in fruits and vegetables, so it is often more effective.

Isn't this food safer than risking patent medicines? Two tablespoonfuls of ALL-BRAN daily are usually sufficient. If seriously constipated, use with each meal. See your doctor, if you do not get relief.

Use as a cereal, or in cooking. Sold by all grocers. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

King George has seen many times called the second best shot in England. He more than proved his accuracy in Nepal while tiger hunting. He accounted for 24 of the 39 tigers that fell before the guns of the royal hunting party.

Our picture to-day shows the King in the act of shooting.

For just a month celebrations were held in India for the King-Emperor and the Queen-Empress. On January 19, 1912, they sailed home from Bombay with the cheers of all India ringing in their ears.

There were many reverberations of the King's visit; he had promised constitutional changes in the Indian government and the Indian people have since been given a measure of self-government in lengthy debate on the subject. The King had conferred the governments and forced them to adjust things. The changes were popular in India; they seemed to strengthen the government and ease the oppression of certain inclement areas.

More than anything else, this visit resulted in a very real loyalty on the part of the Indian people who had previously shown some resentment toward British rule.

The King and Queen had been able to undo much of this. It was their first major role as monarchs of the empire.

Though Europe was peaceful and calm when the King and Queen returned in 1912, there was an undercurrent of strife approaching statesmen were worried; Germany was making many suspicious moves.

Again the King was called upon to play a role which, although it failed in its purpose, it nevertheless showed his passionate desire to keep peace in Europe—just as his father, Edward the Peacemaker, before him. The King was called upon to visit the Kaiser.

"I mean it. Until they repeal the law of gravity, Sarl can never build a ditch from Asare Lake around the Barrier. We're run this survey over the exact route shown on his map, and we're by long-odds four higher than when we started."

Stub peered back toward the lake. "Don't look like it. Looks like we're lower than the lake itself."

"A half mile back the land begins rising, just a few feet every mile—too little for your eye to catch. It slopes upward to the spot we're standing on, and there's not a way under heaven that Sarl can fetch his ditch around the Barrier without making water run uphill."

Slowly comprehension came to Stub; his face clouded, and unheeded from his fingers. "Lord!" he exclaimed. "That means Nick Sarl has contrived the greatest hoax in all the history of the Southwest. It means not one red cent of stock in the company or of the price paid for that land will ever be returned. By heaven, I'll never mean to build a ditch."

Dick laughed bitterly. "And no one can touch him—that's the joke of it. Sarl can always point to his survey. He probably paid a good round sum for that lying piece of work, and the man who made it will never be able to talk."

Stub crushed beneath his breath while Dick dismantled the transit and laid the tripod across his horse. "When this news breaks there'll be no living to tear loose in Verde." With sombre eyes he looked toward the setting sun, and mounted.

But as they turned their horses, three riders emerged from the base of th Barrier on a swinging gallop and came straight toward them. Even in the gathering dusk Dick recognized the figure of their leader, and stood without a word rapidly unbuttoned the two upper buttons of his shirt, then called to Stub.

"Got your gun?"

"Sure. I haven't forgot my gun any more than my pants these sweet days."

"Good. That's Sarl and two of his hired men."

Lowell looked about him. Not a solitary soul on the windswept desert. Well, he was armed a time for the show down as any, and together he and Stub cantered forward.

• • • •

As they rode closer to the approaching horsemen, Dick asked, "Do you know the other two with Sarl?"

"I've seen 'em both up el Toro with the Bar-Y outfit. I believe they're tripod that Dick carring across the both punchers. Tough customers and a saddle suspicion glowed in his eyes.

Dick's own eyes were to survey the boundary on the other side of the Barrier," he began. "There's nothing to it. I'll show you."

Lowell's eyes burned steadily back. "That's just the conclusion I've come to, Sarl." he answered with unruffled calm. "There's absolutely nothing to be seen from here. But what a surprise it's going to be when the people of Verde find that out."

Surprised, Sarl made no reply. His eyes passed to Stub, then back again. Dick, meanwhile, had curled his leg carelessly over the saddle horn.

That ditch of yours will come through just about where we are, isn't it?"

"You know damn well it couldn't go around other end." Sarl flared back impatiently. "This is the only possible way. My survey shows that."

Dartmouth, N.S., April 1 (CP)—Dartmouth Municipal Police brought 20 jobless men to jail here today following disorders at the Nova Scotia Passage Relief Camp. The men were to face charges of riotous conduct. Fifteen prisoners declared their demonstration had no connection with an alleged plot to destroy all the relief camps across Canada, mentioned in the House of Commons on Friday by Hon. Grote Stirling, Minister of National Defence.

A food shortage, particularly during the past week, was their main grievance, they said, declaring one man had been fined 25 cents for stealing two prunes.

RANGERS TIED MAROONS BUT LOSE ON ROUND

Montreal Will Meet Toronto For Stanley Cup

1ST GAME THURSDAY

Rangers Take Off Goalie in Dying Stages to Win Round

(By Alex Bell)

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal, April 1.—(CP)—Survivor of as gripping a struggle as any the game has seen Montreal Maroons were quietly confident today as they faced a five-game series with Toronto Maple Leafs for the Stanley Cup and World's Professional Hockey title. Last season's championship Chicago Black Hawks and New York Rangers were eliminated in Maroons' climb to the finals.

The same slobbery defensive game used against Chicago until a break came proved good enough to earn a 3-2 tie for Maroons Saturday despite a daring, smashing Ranger offensive that never let up after the first five minutes. All the power and craft that carried Lester Patrick's men into their ninth consecutive play-off hockey was not enough to wipe out the 2-1 margin Maroons won in New York but it kept a crowd of 11,000 tensed until the final bell signalled Marooned had the round, 3-2.

Rangers Fight Hard

Never better than one goal behind on the two-game total-goal round another break went against Rangers, when Butch Keeling had an open net to shoot at for a score, that would have tied the round and changed the complexion of the game. A rolling puck too high on his stick made him hoist it over the cage into the crowd.

Maroons played steady hockey watchful for a scoring chance, which came often enough in Rangers' wide-open game but the first period was almost over before Kerr was beaten again. Russ Blinco did the trick, when he found Earl Seibert picked up Dave Trottier pass and slid the puck underneath the stretching goal-keeper.

Shifty Ott Heller and Lynn Patrick combined for the only goal of the second period. After Heller's rush was halted Patrick picked up the loose puck, eluded Wentworth, and drove it in. Slow Evans was in the penalty box when the goal was scored. He went off for picking up the puck with a goal on his long shot, that beat Kerr but struck the post.

Maroons Go to Front

Maroons' stock soared less than three minutes after the third period started, when Trottier made it 2-2 on a long shot from centre ice, just after Blinco started to play. His hand angle drive from close-in gave Kerr no chance.

Undismayed Rangers used four forwards and were rewarded, when Bert Connolly shook off Allan Shields and Wentworth and Muzzy Murdoch and Patrick combined to furnish Connolly with the opening for his first goal in Stanley Cup play-offs. The former Moncton Hawk held his shot until Conacher moved.

Rangers kept coming in wave after wave but the closest they came to scoring again, was when Cecil Dillon struck the post from a scramble. Lionel Conacher's coolness did much to save the world Maroons as Patrick kept five forwards on with five minutes to go before yanked his goalkeeper in the last two. Conacher's long lifts kept the puck out long enough for Maroons to organize for the surging Blueshirts.

The Cooks-Boucher line was the best on ice. Their pivoting, criss-cross passing game was always menacing to Maroons' defenders and brought the best goof the game, as Bill and Frank Boucher drew the defence, while Bun parked at the goal-crease in time to take Bill's pass and beating it between his legs for the score. Alex Connell was caught cold on the play as Bun's back was to the goal, when the shot was made.

Wentworth, Conacher, Russ Blinco and Hooley Smith, who played with a broken thumb, shone for the Maroons with their close checking display, when the going was toughest.

Maroons came through the game without injury and will be at full strength for the opening game Thursday.

JIMMIE FOXX SOME CATCHER

Thinks The A's Will Go Somewhere in League Race

(By Alan Gould, Associated Press Sports Writer)

Atlanta, Ga., April 1 (AP)—This would be a great day to pull the prediction that Philadelphia Athletics will win the American League pennant. Not down town, but as the A's are doing themselves. Unfortunately the joker in the calendar would be detected quickly. Besides the A's won't win the pennant and Jimmie Foxx would be irritated.

The extra "X" in Jimmie's name marks the spot he is on this spring, being the backstopping for the venerable Connie Mack's youthful aggregation and running the risk of cheating abruptly the career of one of the greatest batsmen in the American League. After a month behind the bat during the season of the year when pitchers, especially young pitchers, are at their wildest, Foxx is unscathed and has nothing more than a mild back ache to complain about. The truth is that Jimmie, despite some misgivings, likes his new job because "there's a future in it."

"It's a different proposition this spring" admits Foxx, "it's a tougher job for me behind the plate but I'm satisfied now I can see what the club, also that we are going somewhere."

WRITERS PICK CARDS AGAIN

Think They Will Repeat in Winning National League Title

(By Bob Cavagnaro)

New York, April 1.—(AP)—The world champion St. Louis Cardinals stand out today as the choice of Major League Baseball experts to retain the National League Pennant.

Of the 77 sports editors and baseball writers, who participated in the ninth annual Associated Press Pennant Poll, 39 picked the Cardinals to repeat.

The general belief the 1935 race will be strictly a two-team affair was adequately reflected in the poll for both Terry's New York crew received 31 of the remaining 3 first-place ballots. The only other clubs likely to figure in the pennant race, as the experts see it, are Chicago Cubs and Pittsburgh Pirates. Four writers cast their first place ballots for the Cubs and three for the Pirates.

Not only did the Cardinals and Giants together received 79 of the 77 first-place ballots but they likewise monopolized the second-place votes, the Cardinals getting 23 of them and the Giants 21. Again Chicago, with six, and Pittsburgh with seven, are the only other clubs to figure in the balloting.

Two Goals by "Pep" Kelly, Rookie Rightwinger for Leafs, Wins N.H.L. Title from Boston

Ties Game And Scores Winning Goal in 96 Seconds Overtime

TENSE STRUGGLE

Penalties to Bruins in Third Frame Were Costly

By ELMER DULMAGE

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, April 1 (CP)—Regis (Pep) Kelly, the curly-headed Irish kid, who jostled Ken Doraty into the minors, depriving Toronto Maple Leafs of one of hockey's greatest pinch-scorers, found himself seated today on the bench that Doraty throne—a National League play-off hero.

He's there because he brought the N.H.L. championship to Toronto Saturday night by firing two dramatic shots, that gave the Leafs a 2-1 overtime triumph over Boston Bruins in the fourth game of the classic series. Not even Doraty's famous drive that broke up a 104-minute-overtime struggle in the 1933 series took more than a minute.

The twin deliveries of the 21-year-old Kelly, playing his first season as a professional, gave the near-record crowd of 14,850 into a frenzy of joy—and a thunderous spell of gloom, that had prevailed Maple Leaf Gardens since late in the first period, when the gallant Bruins swept into a one-goal lead.

Period Nearly Gone

It occurred at the 18:11 mark in the third period, when Babe Siebert and Peggy O'Neill of the Bruins and Harold Cotton of the Leafs were crowded in the penalty box. At that moment Cotton's absence from the game Kelly immured in those parts, the pepper-pot from North Bay, Ontario, quickly rectified that.

One minutes and 36 seconds after the start of the sudden-death overtime period, the Rookie leaped out of the penalty box, where he had put in a spell with the sixth incarcerated Leaf, O'Neill and Cotton. He ripped into Boston Territory with a wide six seconds broke up the game.

At the end of a Leaf gang attack, the former Newmarket and St. Michael's College Junior picked up the puck behind the Bruin net. He skated around the cage, looking for an opening to pass to Charlie Conacher. Hec Bilins or Joe Primeau. There wasn't an opening and Kelly circled around until he reached a point 10 feet directly in front of the net.

It was a duel between the rookie and Goalie Cecil (Tiny) Thompson, who last year was voted the best N.H.L. tiie snatched away by the midget Leaf. Doraty beat Thompson with that celebrated flying shot. Now it was Kelly's turn before Thompson got the ice at long last he turned around to pick it up.

Leads His Mates

Until the way was paved for this drama, the Bruins had outplayed the Leafs, fighting a defensive an effort to square the series at two wins each and force a fifth game. Only spectacular puck-stopping by George Hainsworth had kept the Bruins' assault within bounds.

Red Beattie, one of the most effective forwards in the game, had whipped in a pass from Nels Stewart at the 15:45 marking in the first period a second later Nels himself misfired, when he drove a shot over the top of him. Through the second period the Bruins moved confidently behind their lead.

Three or four times Beattie, Paul Haynes, Mac Colville and Earl Siebert Shore seemed certain to get another goal that would have been too much for the Leafs to overcome, but their worth was unrelenting in these crisis, diving headlong into two or three attackers to spoil shots.

Except for Red Beattie's penalty in the second period, the Bruins had stayed on the ice, doing commendably little body-checking. But when Siebert accidentally tripped Frank Finnigan and drew a minor penalty late in the third period, the Boston players were so tired, that the defence weakened at last.

Goal Disallowed

Hardly had the defenceman left the ice, when Cotton knocked in a shot from John Gottselig. Price have the goal disallowed because Kelly was in the crease. There was much verbal to do about this as Cotton protested, swung his arms around with Goalie Thompson and many other players.

The result was a near-skirmish and major penalties for Cotton and O'Neill, who was alleged by Referee A. E. Smith to have landed a punch. O'Neill later explained that Haynes had been guilty. But Cotton and O'Neill left the scene and Siebert, who had jumped from the penalty box to participate, in the squabble, had two minutes added to his sentence.

O'Neill and Cotton were still on the sidelines, when it was all over, when Kelly had fired his tying and winning blows. Siebert had just finished his penalty and was rushing to the help of his mates, when the winning tally was scored. His jump overboard during the argument had been expensive.

Here is Tiny in the Boston dressing room, with eyes closed, while deft fingers of the club hysician bandage his wound. He came back to play as brilliantly as before the accident.

Confound Critics On Win of Game

Toronto, April 1—(CP)—The critizens, who had held the ball belief, that such events as National Hockey League Playoffs, Stanley Cup Finals and World Baseball Series were conducted for the sole benefit of those capitalists behind the scenes don't think that today. Pep Kelly broke the ides Saturday night.

Not for years had the skeptics been so sure of anything as they were that the Toronto-Boston N. H. L. series was destined to continue for five games, they told one and all that the Bruins would win Saturday night's game, thus evening the series.

And along about the third period they fellows, or the ones, who paid cash to witness the event, gleefully called attention to every wide or high shot fired by Charlie Conacher as an outright sign, that the Leafs were "throwing" the game.

The screeched their disapproval from the grey seated seats along the upper rim of Maple Leaf Gardens. They whispered wisely to their neighbors, that "The Gardens people will take in $23,000 on the fifth game." Then young Mr. Kelly scored two rapid goals, ending the series.

Even the hardest-bitten "wise guys," were dumbfounded today. Only, too, think maybe there's some honesty in sport.

N. H. L. STARS

Pep Kelly, Toronto, scored the two goals, that gave Leafs victory over Boston Bruins.

Davie Kerr, Rangers, who kicked out 42 Maroon shots and saved Rangers from worse defeat.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

Keeping in trend with the times or perhaps we should say weather conditions, the Belleville Golf Club is holding its annual meeting and election of officers at the Chamber of Commerce tonight. The Belleville golfers enjoyed a very successful season in 1934, but prospects for a more successful year seem to be in store for them in 1935. Besides the usual executive positions to be filled the chairmen of the various committees, in whose hands the destiny of the club really lies, will also be appointed. Practically all sporting or athletic club in the city have completed arrangements for future summer activities except the local lawn bowling club who are to convene in the near future. President Charlie Peck informs us.

With their finance-campaign an assured success—the South End Yacht Club, athletic branch is completed arrangements to move their present club rooms to the newly proposed alder on the water front. Extensive alterations have been planned and the South End'ers are going in for aquatics in a big way in the future. Swimming we heard recently that Promoter Clem Allen of the Stewart-Warner-Alemite A.C. has acquired the services of Lloyd George for and would eventually convert it into a boxing and wrestling arena. Directors of the ringside seats are being planned, the rumor stated. What's going on there?

Then again we understand, that there have been 23 applications received by Promoter Allen as candidates for his Boardwalk Golden Gloves boxing tournament on April 15th. The nine interesting features to be announced followed the recent past heavyweights have been kept secret, but out of town boxers in the past heavyweights have been somewhat of a mixup, especially in local boxing circles and should add considerable prestige to the Golden Gloves tournament. One lightheavyweight also has forwarded an entry blank to Promoter Allen, which means there is a fine opening for the local promoter between the 170 or 175 limit. Although today is the last day for entry forms to be received, they may have still to be others in the mail before the closing hour of midnight tonight, as well as ringside seats are to be erected at the Armouries for the Golden Gloves tournament, Matchmaker Allen says.

We received a note from G. Ernest Chisholm, of Picton, that "Ernie" is basking in the sunshine down Florida way and sent along greetings. For the information of our Peterboro scribbling contemporary we might say, that although he tries to put us on the well known spot in connection with the Leafs, we still are on friendly terms with our baseball inclined friends some 25 miles to the east. As a matter of fact on better terms than some in the Quarter Out Town who make the balls.

Elsewhere in today's issue of the annual statement and the result of the election of officers of the local AAjmaa Club. For a first year organization the AAjmaa's surely did themselves noble and finished on the right side of the ledger, that year "Clem" deserves of softball fame in the city, will guide the destinies of the club. Besides introducing box lacrosse and paddling to local sport fame with a degree of success last season, the AAjmaa Club is to sponsor softball this summer, they say, Commadore Bill Fry has procured a racing shell for the club and exhibition games are being formulated to assure the rejuvenation of paddling in Belleville in 1935.

After entering into repeated conversations with numerous citizens who attended Friday night's interclay swimming meet, we are firmly of the opinion that the programme would bear repeating. Only one dissenting voice was heard and his stick was perhaps a logical one. "I was exceedingly and agreeably surprised at the success of the meet, but had the races been presented with a little more dispatch, it would have been perfect," our friend stated, but he also admitted that he had never seen such keen competition and so many hair-raising finishes in one night of sport. Even the impromptu exhibition races would doubtlessly be in order.

The local Badminton Club rung down the curtain on its most successful season on Saturday night when all final matches were played. Although there were a number of matches to be played they were all run off with marked precision and the various club championships crowned for the current year. Nothing but words of praise were heard in the club on the buffet luncheon served by the ladies after the tournament ended all officers from the president down was congratulated for the splendid manner in which they materially assisted the club in achieving success. At present there are over 100 members, most of whom take an active part each week in Badminton when at the Belleville Badminton Club re-opens next fall, membership will be limited and the results of the championship matches are to be found elsewhere in today's issue.

Forced to come from behind to gain victory the Maple Leafs and the Maroons qualified for the Stanley Cup finals on Saturday night. The first game of the best of series opens at Toronto on Thursday.

The Canadian golf fraternity England this year has been invited to visit Wales and play over the Royal St. David's course, said to be one of the finest courses in the world. The invitation was sent to Mr. "Sandy" Somerville and the Belleville Trade Group, well known in Wales, were notified of such action on Saturday by the Belleville Council of which The Rt. Hon. The Earl of Plymouth P.C. is president.

"UNKNOWN BLONDE"

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

I suppose, when I first started, I did have qualms about it. It seemed sort of raw, even to a girl who'd played Broadway floor shows and tantalized men across the lighted rivers a burlesque stage, to go into a room and take off most of her clothes with a strange man inside the doors.

But my last payroll was three months behind me. I'd walked out on Manny Mendelsky show when he'd given me a lot of those leering looks during rehearsals and let the hint drop that there were four pounds looking blondes looking for every job, and I'd quit being an iceberg personally or else.

I'd gone along pretty well the first month by selling what I'd accumulated in the way of clothes and a ring or two, and I'd been running from one booking office to another trying to tag on to a new show, but Manny's word was big and even the agents who'd always been able to find me a spot before, had cut to be suddenly filled up. Of ten a friendly guy I'd known for nearly three years finally tipped me off.

"Manny's in with the right people along the Stem," he said "and he hooks more shows than all the agents then any two other show producers in the business. To offend Manny would mean loss of a swell slice of business, and well—you know kid, it's rotten, but the word's been passed along that Manny'd be plenty offended if any of us gave you a break. Go it? Why don't you take a whirl at some other racket for a while?"

So I'd tried applications at specialty shops. I guess I filled a hundred applications with personnel managers, but nothing came out of them and that meant the job.

I read columns of want ads but they were for the kind of girls who'd had business training, and lips most of the thousands of kids who'd crashed Broadway on the strength of good eyes, reasonably good looking map, the right kind of ankles and calves and curves placed around where curves ought to be. I didn't have any more qualifications for business than a Chinaman has of filling the Mikado's job. I figured out I'd have to wait for four jobs and one day I spotted one that called for a "good looking" blonde or brunette, size, over 21, reasonably intelligent for confidential missions." I answered that.

"WORK IS EASY"

"The work's easy," the man told me when I answered that ad. "You don't work more than a few hours and the fee ranges from $50 up for each assignment."

"Who," I asked with memories of fifteen cent meals in mind, and offers of twenty-five a for six eight-hour days, "do I have to kill?"

He grinned a bit and said:

"This is a quiet kind of business. Maybe it isn't the kind of business that you can boast about, but it's as honest as lots of other things, and even if it looks bad, a girl can go through with it and be a lot straighter than she can in jobs where, for instance, she has to be nice to the boss."

"Well," I said, a little nervously, "I'm listening."

"You see," he said, "the laws of this State don't let people get divorces except for supposed infractions of the moral code. Lots of men, and women, too, get disgusted and the other half of the wedding gone wrong are willing to let the divorce some along. But many of these divorce seekers are not willing to actually become moral bankrupts to get a divorce. So they just put on all the scenery for a breaking of the moral code, let the witnesses come in and look, and then, when just what the witnesses are to tell to the judge, things look bad enough to let the lawyer and the judge imagine a bit—and then there's the divorce. Simple, isn't it?"

At first I jumped up, and flared out at him no one had ever insulted me so much in all my life. I stamped toward the door, in spite of his suggestion that I think it over and remember the job was available if I changed my mind.

A couple more days of tramping, and two lunches skipped on two successive days had me back there, though, on the third day.

And, as it happened there was an available assignment available right then.

"You go to the Hotel Albatross," he said, handing me a room key, "and go to Room 610. You get into it negligee, with this under it"—the "this" being about the gaudiest night gown I'd ever seen.

"The man—no, you don't even know his name, will come up half an hour after you arrive. He'll go into the bath and change into pajamas. Then you get into bed. He doesn't. When the knock comes on the door and his wife and her witnesses crash into the room you jump out of bed, rush to the bath and lock the door. That's all there is to it—and when you've dressed again come on back here and get your fifty bucks."

It worked out just that way. The man didn't even seem to know I was in the room and it ruffled me a bit to see him act that way, but after all, business was business. I got my fifty even, know his name until I read about the case in the papers when his wife filed her papers and it was announced that an alimony settlement had been effected out of court.

And I guess I had a dozen cases like that. But, in a month, those there were $50. Some of them were $100. Once I had the "unknown blonde" job in a case where a millionaire was involved and the fee was $500. I ate regularly, got my rings and clothes back from Uncle and had my rent paid a whole quarter in advance.

ROUTINE JOB

Then I drew what seemed like a routine job, and prepared for it as I had on the other cases. When "Ile" appeared he looked at me once, and then declared:

"Not you sister—you don't belong in this kind of a job. I won't go through with it."

I told him I'd never send him before, nor he me, and that we'd never see each other again, that it was "strictly business."

"That's what you think," he said, and walked out on me.

The wife and the witnesses arrived on schedule, but I was alone. And when they'd gone, as mystified as I was over the turn of events. I went back to the office. There'd been a telephone call and the office had been told to pay my fee. But some way or another the eyes of that boy bothered me. I wouldn't take the money.

Another month went by. I saw his picture in the papers later on—you know, when Keith-Ann Mendelsky divorced. There'd been some girl called in on that job. I didn't know for months why I hadn't filled the bill.

He told me about it later on in Florida—said he knew right when he saw me that I represented something to him that had always been missing from his life and he wouldn't have any hand to muddy up my reputation, even by innuendo.

Oh! didn't tell you. did I? You see he looked me up after he'd had his divorce, and well—by now I've been Mrs. Keith Montrose for six months now, and that time in Florida, when he told me all about it, was when we were there on our honeymoon.

Little Benny's Note-Book

Pop was smoking and thinking in his private chair and ma said, The strangest thing happened to me today, Willyum, it was like an adventure story, I'd been shopping and I wasn't even out of the store when I first had the impression, she said.

What impression? pop said and ma said, Well, at first it was more like a shadowy intuition than an impression, but gradually it decended into a blind fear of uncertainty.

What did, for Peet sake? pop said, and ma said, Why, the feeling that I was being followed. I didn't actually believe it with my own eyes till I had wawked 2 or 3 blocks, but sure enough there he was still behind me, a little man with a black slouch hat and a kind of an acoustic expression. If I'd been sure it was a detective, ma said.

Well to tell the truth I've often thawt it mite be a good economical idee to have you permanently shadowed to see if you layed your diamond ring down anywhere and went away and left it, pop said, Being what ma is always doing in the house, and she said, Dont be far fetched. Anyway, nobody can say that I'm a woman to be likely followed, so I determined to ask him its intentions, and that's what I did, rite in his face without any ifs or ands or butts, she said.

And what for Peet sake were his intentions? pop said, and ma said, His intentions were to recover his umbrella that I had absentmindedly wawked away with at the hankerchiff counter while I was thinking of something else, goodness knows what.

Hankerchiffs, proberly, pop said, and ma said, Proberly. Anyway he was very nice about it, he apologized for following me and I put him as his ease with a few gracious words, and of course his umbrella, she said.

Then I started to do the cross-word puzzle and pop got in back of the sporting page, saying it's a wimmins werld.

TARZAN—

While the revolt near the Punjab had not, as yet, assumed alarming proportions, the British prepared for action.

Daily, on the parade grounds, martial manoeuvres took place. Pat was adopted as the "Daughter of the Regiment."

She was at the review, watching the trooping of the colors. How those drums and marching ranks made her blood tingle!

Almost, she regretted that in a few days she would be in the mountains' coolness. The evening before her departure was her birthday.

Lady Codi gave a party in Pat's honor. Always a marvelous dancer, every officer present demanded her as partner. Yet early morn found the ready to leave, as a native craft shoved down placid stream.

Al-

Captain Canby accompanied Pat to the river port where the "Tiger's Whelp" was to take her north. Aboard, all unconscious of the dark fate waiting for both of them, she waver her father farewell. She was never to see him again.

ANTI-EXECUTION PLANES CIRCLE ABOVE SCAFFOLD

Trail Yellow Banners "Stop The Death Sentence"

PETTY OFFICER HANGED

Wealthy Widow Wages War Against Capital Punishment

London, April 2 (AP)—A naval petty officer, who cut a shipmate's throat, was hanged today in Wandsworth Jail, while two airplanes hired by anti-capital punishment group, headed by a wealthy widow, circled overhead.

The airplanes trailed huge yellow banners bearing the words "Stop the Death Sentence." In the street in front of the jail, trucks drove back and forth with the strains of "Abide With Me" blaring forth from loud speakers. Sandwich men distributed handbills to all who passed.

Nevertheless Petty Officer Leonard Albert Dalgliesh was dropped through the trap. He had killed Chief Petty Officer Dargan aboard the Aldebaran ship Marshal Sault, January 19, at Chatham.

Mrs. Violet Vanderelt, Kensington widow, who started a campaign against the death penalty, organized the demonstration starting at the prison in her limousine, equipped with a chauffeur and a loud speaker, she was soon in difficulty with the police.

She herself replaced the chauffeur in the driver's seat and drove back and forth shouting out of the loudspeaker: "This hanging is an innocent man! We have lastminute evidence to prove it."

The police took down license numbers and the names of the demonstrators but made no arrests.

The infantry of Lithuania on review in Memel, Lithuania. As the war god stalks over Europe, 20 years after the great debacle of 1914-1918, the eyes of Europe, and the world, are turning to Memel, former German territory, hoping that in this spot "Sarajevo" will not be duplicated. Four alleged German Nazis, convicted of plotting to seize Memel to return it to the Reich are under sentence of death. Lithuanian Chancellor Hitler has protested their sentence; Europe expects that it will be commuted to life imprisonment, but in some quarters it is stated that that expectation is born of hope. President Antons Smetona (LEFT) finds himself the focus of European eyes as Memel incident assumes major importance.

Fort William Industrial Farm May be Closed, Says Hepburn

He announced closing of the women's farm at Concord, north of Toronto, on April 15 because of fewer prisoners who will be sent to Mercer reformatory.

Mr. Hepburn said consideration is also being given to closing the Industrial Farm at Fort William where in recent months there have been only 35 or 40 prisoners.

Quaint Customs Of French Law Seen in Trial

Saint Peter Port, Guernsey Island April 2—(AP)—The first witness for the crown was called today in one of the strangest murder trials of modern times in which a woman's life is at stake before a jury chosen in popular election by the residents of this little channel island.

Police Constable Ernest Ferbrache French law regulated the trial of Gertrude Elisabeth Hamilton, 34-year-old housekeeper, charged with murdering Alfred Brouard, 76, a farmer, by cutting his throat. She also is accused of forging his name to a will in her favor.

After the opening ceremonies yesterday, the defendant and the court made a six-mile trip to the whitewashed farm house where Brouard lived with his housekeeper. There, according to the ancient French judicial procedure, an attempt was made to re-enact the death scene in the presence of the accused.

GRANTS ARE CUT TO 3 UNIVERSITIES BUDGET STATES

Sharp Reductions in Expenditures in Normal Schools

LIST OF GRANTS

Increased Grants to Agricultural Schools Made

Toronto, April 2 (CP)—Three Ontario Universities, the University of Toronto, Queen's University, Kingston, and the University of Western Ontario at London, will receive decreased grants from the Ontario Government in the fiscal year 1935-36, according to estimates tabled in the Legislature today.

The $1,000,000 grant to the University of Toronto has been decreased to $900,000 and the grant to the University of Western Ontario with the Ontario College of Education will be $294,426, compared with $315,000 during the past year.

Grants to Queen's and Western were also cut, $25,000 from $275,-000 to $250,000.

Normal School Cuts

Toronto, April 2 (CP)—Decrease in the expenditure of four of Ontario's eight Normal Schools is provided in estimates tabled in the Provincial Legislature today. The schools affected are Peterborough, Stratford, Hamilton and North Bay.

In the case of the other four schools, Toronto, Ottawa, London and the University of Ottawa Normal School the estimates make provision for the same number of teachers pended during the fiscal year 1933-34.

Stratford suffers greatest in the maintenance reduction the Government had decided upon for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1936. Maintenance of the school last year was $42,604 but the estimates provide for expenditure of $38,880.

Shortcomings in expenditure must be reduced from $29,000 last year to $28,220 in the new fiscal year and the pay which spent $37,855 in 1933-34 is alloted $36,950. Hamilton expenditure in 1933-34 was $39,933. For the new year estimates provide $39,750.

Cost of the Toronto School last year was $115,969 and estimated cost for the new year is $115,000 but $128,925. Ottawa may spend $80,000, compared with $77,000 last year. Cost of the Normal Department in 1934-35 was $41,201 but for the new fiscal year the estimates provide $41,235.

Hepburn Charges Deficit Should Have Been Shown As $3,734,720 Last Year

Switching Charged by Premier in Liberal Budget Speech

'PULLING WOOL OVER'

Per Capita Debt 74 Cents in 1904, is $110.53- Says Hepburn

Toronto, April 2 (CP)—If former premier Geo. S. Henry had correctly handled the Province's accounts in his budget oddness last year, there would have appeared a deficit of $3,734,720.05 instead of a surplus "of $476,426.61. Premier Mitchell Hepburn declared today in bringing down the first budget by an Ontario Liberal administration in 31 years.

At the same time the Premier announced tax changes affecting succession duties and stock transfers. Progressive increase of one per cent on each $1,000,000 to a maximum of 14 per cent go into effect in addition to the straight 10 per cent succession duty tax. Syndicate units were brought under the stock transfer tax.

Speaking of Mr. Henry's last budget the latter said, "The former Provincial Treasurer must have known there was no surplus because he appears to have been made to conceal the fact that, instead of a surplus of $476,426.61, the accounts of the province showed that there was a deficit of millions of dollars—to be exact. A deficit of $3,734,720.02."

Switching Jurgling Charged

Futher, he charged: "The former Provincial Treasurer manipulated, switched, juggled or whatever you call it, to conceal from the people which amounted in all to $4,211,-146.64 were incorrectly handled."

Mr. Hepburn also charged that the former government overestimated revenue and underestimated expenditures and public debt charges so the deficit for the fiscal year ending Oct. 31, 1934, was $30,-599,349.78.

Balancing Without Debt Costs

The deficit is created by charging relief payments as ordinary expenditures. The premier went on to declare: "It is not the relief expenditures the province could balance its budget.

"The record following the Dominion general elections, I propose to ask for a conference with the new government of Canada," he said. "At which time I hope to ascertain the exact amount of relief responsibility the Dominion Government will be prepared to assume," he said.

The present Federal Government has been paying $600,000 a month toward unemployment relief. He received a telegram from Minister of Labor W. A. Gordon stating that this grant would be continued throughout April but Mr. Hepburn did not know whether any money would be forthcoming after that date.

After the election, however, when he learns the extent of federal aid, he proposes a special session of the legislature to introduce legislation to balance the year taxation as will balance the budget.

New Succession Duty Tax

Chief of the new taxation proposals is in respect to the succession duty tax. The government intends an additional tax on estates where the net value is more than $1,000,000. The present tax on such estates is 10 per cent, said Mr. Hepburn. Under the new scheme there will be a progressive increase of one per cent on each million to a minimum of 14 per cent. The government also proposes to increase from 10 to 15 per cent the surcharge added to all taxes collected under the succession duties act of 1934. Progressive increases by way of marriage settlement will be brought under the act also, the premier indicate made taxable under the stock transfer tax. The present stock transfer tax of two cents per $100 or fraction thereof is to be increased to three cents.

Referring to items in the accounts which, he said, were "incorrectly handled," Mr. Hepburn mentioned first the sum of "rentals of $197,111.15 paid by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission to the Niagara Parks Commission in 1933-34. He contended these should have been charged to capital account as the power is now so treated in several years before this time.

Sinking fund instalments, amounting to $840,219.94 in 1933-34, were charged Mr. Hepburn declared, but should have been listed as servicing, said Mr. Hepburn, charging the amount was charged to capital in order to pull the cost of the year of the public and to deceive the people into believing that the administration had a surplus."

Other items were charged to surplus: account by Mr. Henry, said the Premier when the charge should have been made to ordinary account. One was $56,544 (Continued on page 8, Col. 1)

Notations Made by Hon. J.R. Cooke Touched Cancellation of Debts

Executor Asks Court For Directions 'as to Validity

Toronto, April 2.— Whether certain notations made by the late Hon. John R. Cooke, who died as head of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission, on a statement of his assets and upon the face of an envelope constitute a valid direction to the Mercantile Trust Company, executor of his will to cancel arrears of interest up to January 1, 1934, on promissory notes that he held and to reduce the principal of two such securities from 6 per cent. to 3 per cent. per annum was the question submitted to Mr. Justice Makins in Weekly Court at Osgoode Hall today.

His lordship after hearing argument by counsel representing relatives and legatees under the will, counsel for mortgagors and notewriters, reserved judgment.

Presenting a motion on behalf of the National Trust Company, solicitor Mr. Gordon Conant, K.C., for C. Donnan, K.C., of Belleville, said that the executor had been advised on Aug. 13, 1934, prepared a statement of his assets as at Jan. 1, 1934. At the top of that statement Mr. Cooke had written: "Interest on mortgages and notes reduced 6 per cent. to 3 per cent., at least for 1933 and 1934." Mr. Justice Makins: "Reduce arrears of interest cancelled to principal?" Mr. Conant: "I suppose he had written: "All arrears of interest on mortgages and notes cancelled to date as people simply can't pay."

Want Authority

"Is that in his own handwriting," inquired Mr. Justice Makins.

"That is in his own handwriting," said Mr. Conant.

Mr. Donnan said that, in the cir-

LENGTHY SESSION

Rescind Motion For Rental of Curling Rink For Season

Two recommendations, brought before the City Council last night at their regular meeting, one of which passed and the other defeated, brought forth considerable discussion and before they were finally settled the yeas and nays were asked for and recorded. It was one of the longest sessions of the year, the council just concluding their business before eleven o'clock although the members did not come out of committee until shortly after nine o'clock. All the members of the council were present excepting Alderman Thomas Marshall and nearly every member at some time during the evening took part in the discussion on the subjects before the chair, Alderman Richard Arnott presiding in the absence of the committee of the whole.

The first recommendation to be ratified was that of the one passed on Thursday night at committee meeting respecting the lease and grant of $300.00 to the South End Athletic Club. Alderman McCreary opposed this action of the council and pleaded with the members to use their business sense and refer

NEW FISCAL YEAR DEFICIT FORESEEN

Total Receipts of New Fiscal Year Seen as $15,464,774

Toronto, April 2 (CP)—Ontario had a deficit of $20,580,240.78 for the fiscal year ending October 31, 1934, Premier Hepburn told the legislature in his budget address as well as Provincial Treasurer before the Ontario legislature.

For the new fiscal year beginning April 1 and ending March 31, 1935, a deficit of $14,806,346.87 was estimated.

Presenting the first budget by a Liberal Government since 1904, Mr. Hepburn included a supplementary statement covering the five-month period between October 31, 1934, and March 31, 1935, in line with new legislation to change the fiscal year.

The interim statement, actual to February 28 and forecast for March, showed a deficit of $7,440,-893.81.

Included in the 1934 deficit was $18,558,979.62 for direct relief, an expenditure not shown in ordinary account until this year. The five-month figure for unemployment relief was placed at $8,833,192.83.

In budgeting for the new fiscal year, the government included $15,-000,000 for unemployment direct relief and its administration, this amount were placed in capital account, there would have been budgeted an estimated surplus of nearly $400,000.

With the five-month deficit of $7,449,223.62 and the difference of $6,860,760.40 between capital receipts and payments for the same period, added to the debt on March 31, 1935, would be $672,099,816.71. The 1933 fiscal year ended with a debt of $648,-650,136,202.82.

Ordinary revenue for the new fiscal year ending next March 31 was estimated by the Premier at $73,705,246.38 and gross ordinary expenditure for the 1934 fiscal year was estimated at $73,-705,246.38 and ordinary revenue $50,067,841.37.

QUEBEC POWER BONDS COLLAPSE

Bond Dealers Could Obtain no Firm Bids After Premier's Bill

Toronto, April 2.—(CP)— The market for Quebec power bonds practically collapsed today as a result of the Hepburn Government's decision to revoke the contract for power. Some time after the market opening there were no bids except for the Gatineu 5's which were selling around 81-83 compared with 86-87 yesterday. A sharp fall in Gatineau convinced had reached an understanding with the Ontario cabinet, which was confirmed, was the stimulus for the trade in the Gatineaus.

Nominal quotation of 70 to 75 was posted by some of the bond houses for McLaren-Quebec bonds but firm bids were said to be lacking. This issue sold yesterday at 80 to 82. Beauharnois 5 1-2 bonds were quoted at 80-85 against 90-91 yesterday. Gatineau 5's were bid at 29-35 against 40-43 yesterday but also the three bond dealers could not obtain firm bids.

Retail Merchants Discuss Many Questions at Monthly Meeting

May 6 Will Be Observed as Holiday if Proclaimed

Discussion of the parking question, a credit bureau, publicity and other interesting subjects occupied the attention of the members of the Retail Merchants' Association of Belleville at the regular monthly meeting in Dickens' Coffee Shop, Monday evening, with John McIntosh, president, in the chair, assisted by Vice-president R. J. Wray. Chas. T. Dolan acted as secretary in the absence of Secretary W. J. Doyle, absent through illness.

The parking question, ever a difficult subject, resolved itself into the belief that there is plenty of parking space adjacent to the business sections. In the rear areas behind the stores which if fixed up and lighted would relieve the pressure on Front and Bridge Streets and permit visitors to park their cars in comfort while shopping. It was asserted that the great majority of church parkers were citizens who thus deprived possible shoppers from coming to the parking parking positions. The City Council will be requested to have the City Engineer make a survey of available parking space at the rear of stores and members will view it by inspection then fixed up for free parking spaces.

Monday, May 6, if proclaimed a public holiday, will be observed as such by the members of the association, with stores closed for business.

Progress was reported in the movement for bylaws regulating the early closing of stores, in the opinion of the members, and petitions will be presented to the Council in the near future carrying the necessary seventy-five per cent. of the merchants affected.

Request D.S.T.

Daylight saving on the same lines as last year will be requested of the city council.

A discussion as to the recently held cooking school assisted by the Ontario Intelligencer, as to whether it would be better to have the next one in the morning as an aid to afternoon shopping, it was unanimously decided that the afternoon was preferable, providing the school opened earlier than 1.30 and closed not later than four o'clock so that the women could have time to do some shopping before returning home. Morning cooking schools were discouraged as it was felt that if the women came from town to the school in the morning they would not return in the afternoon to shop.

In regard to parking a pledge will be offered all business men in Belleville asking co-operation in solving the parking problem and pledging not to park their cars on Front or Bridge Streets during business hours.

Russell Wotten and Douglas Rowe were appointed delegates to the District Tourist Meeting on Wednesday, April 3.

Laurie Lewis, chairman of the General Committee, in charge of spring and summer activities of the association, reported that there were well worked out and all committees functioning and co-operating with brilliant prospects for a splendid spring and summer business for all members. Non-members will be given a last chance to affiliate with the association and share in the activities of the organization, and it is hoped to have hundred per cent. co-operation in the best interests of all concerned.

Vermilyea, stated Crown Attorney B. J. Donnan, K.C., today.

The coroners inquest was adjourned until the second Monday in April namely the 8th, after it met under Coroner Dr. R. W. Tennant, on October 30th last. The word "abandoned," will be written across the inquest report and the matter will be closed finally.

Of the coroner's jury impanelled on that date, only two members has since died in the person of Samuel J. Weddon, leaving eight of the original jury still summoned automatically dismissed. The remaining jurors are Messrs. Moses W. H. Panter, Chas. Walters, Thos. Coulting, Thos. Marshall, Wm. Deacon, Fred Pollard, W. Vallance and Gerald Stafford.

According to local gaol officials today Harold Vermilyea who is locked in the gaol on his life for the murder of his mother exactly one month from today, May 2nd, he still remains calm and shows no apparent sign of agitation or nervousness. He continues to retain an air of quiet, reading daily and playing at cards in a continuous game of solitaire.

It is expected that shortly an official visit to Harold Vermilyea by the usual course of events, as the question of sanity was raised during the trial.

Police News

Clarence Dafoe and Thomas Fobear, two Elzivar Township youths, were charged with theft in police court in the local County Police Court held before His Worship, Magistrate W. J. Ponton, K.C., in the County House. Following a lengthy lecture from the Bench the youths were given a year's suspended sentence.

The charges arose out of the discovery of articles stolen apparently from the store of Leo Kouri, Tweed merchant, some time ago. Dafoe and Fobear admitted breaking and entering the building and removing a small quantity of gloves and other smaller articles of wearing apparel. Their pals were arrested by Chief Hayes of Tweed, who presented the evidence at the trial today. R. D. Donnan, K.C., represented the Crown in the matter of prosecution and Donnan Jarvis with His Worship in the matter of a suspended sentence. This is the first time neither boys had previously appeared in the Court.

Activities were at a rather low ebb in local police circles during the past 24 hours, there being nothing doing necessary. All Fools' Day, April 1st, did not lend transients from the beaten highway as twenty-nine - tired and weary "hikers" appeared at the night's desk in quest of a warm night's lodging last night.

E. H. Ingram, of this city, reported a slight motor accident last night, the car being damaged, probed by the authorities as it was passing the Memorial Arena by another motorist, implicated in the collision, refused to divulge his name, despite the fact he produced a driver's license. No other motor accidents were reported on slippery highways yesterday, despite the hazardous traction owing to the wet slippery pavements.

MAJOR W. BUNTON VISITS VERMILYEA

S. A. Prison Secretary Accompanies Local Officer to Cell

Major Wallace Buntin of Toronto, Salvation Army Prison Secretary for the Province of Ontario, accompanied by Adjutant W. Martin of the local Salvation Army Corps, paid a visit to the condemned cell of Harold W. Vermilyea on Monday and engaged in a lengthy conversation with the prisoner. Their visit lasted nearly an hour.

Vermilyea who has welcomed the frequent visits of Adjutant Martin since his close incarceration in the local gaol, after pleading guilty of the murder, received the visitors with the utmost cordiality. The talk, although along spiritual lines, was not wholly confined to that subject. Vermilyea was rational and an interesting and intelligent conversationalist.

"He gave us a very friendly greeting and was obviously glad to see us," stated Adjutant Martin today when questioned concerning the visit.

GOLD STORAGE AID OFFERED BY GOV'T

Will Loan up to Half Cost of $50,000 Plants

TORONTO, April 2.—(CP)— In his Budget address to the Ontario legislature today Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn said in view of the difficulties of handling fruit and vegetable growers the government will introduce a bill empowering the administration to loan 50 per cent of the cost of construction of modern co-operative cold storage plant, not to cost more than $50,000.

The amount will be secured by a first mortgage on the building, the payments to be amortized over a 20-year-period with four per cent. Provision will be made granting exemption from municipal taxes on the buildings themselves.

Toronto, April 2.—(CP)—Population of mental hospitals in Ontario has increased more than 4,000 since 1919, Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn said in his Budget address today while speaking of the Hospitals Branch of the Department of Health.

In 1919 patients numbered 7,448; in 1925 9,489; in 1930 10,060; in 1934 12,068.

Toronto, April 2.—(CP) — The Trans-Canada highway from Penetanguishene to North Bay and from Schreiber to the Manitoba Boundary is practically complete to trans-Canada standards, Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn said in the Ontario Legislature today in his Budget address.

Much improvement is needed he said between North Bay and Schreiber while about 200 miles of new construction is held in abeyance "until a definite agreement is reached with the Dominion Government as to its share of the cost."

He said the trans-Canada in Ontario extends more than 1,100 miles, much of it through sparsely or unpopulated territory and "it is manifestly impossible for the province to justify further construction along this route without substantial aid from the Dominion."

POWER CONTRACT BILL INTRODUCED BY THE PREMIER

Cancels 12 Contracts by Declaring Them Unenforceable

BUY AS NEEDED

Bondholders Cannot Take Legal Action by Bill

Toronto, April 2 (CP)—Repercussions of Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn's move in introducing legislation cancelling 13 Ontario Hydro contracts with four Quebec Companies continued unabated today in financial and political centres.

The Quebec Power Commission effected which have a total outstanding mortgage bond issue of approximately $175,000,000, and whose contracts are declared "illegal, void and unenforceable" by the bill, are:

The Gatineau Power Company, The Chats Falls Power Company (also known as the Ottawa Valley Power Company), The Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company and The James MacLaren or Macleod-Quebec Power Company.

The bill, introduced in the Ontario Legislature yesterday, under the provisions of "The Public Electric Power Commission Act, 1935", brought members of the Opposition and Government excitedly forward in their seats as Premier Hepburn explained the far-reaching effects of the two-page piece of legislation.

Provisions contained in the legislation for the cancellation of power by the Ontario Hydro Commission "as it deems advisable" were met later Hepburn said power would continue to be supplied to them by the Gatineau Company at the present contract price.

No power would be taken from the other three companies, the Premier said, under present contract conditions.

An important feature of the bill is that, contrary to individual holders of the bonds can not take legal action against the Province in connection with the cancellation of the contracts.

In offering the bill, Premier Hepburn said:

"I rise to one of the most difficult tasks in my nine years of public life. Then, turning, he said over his head thoughtfully, he added, "Ontario has been placed in an impossible position through the acceptance of huge blocks of power over a period of 40 years, blocks of unsaleable power, far beyond the capacity of the industry of Ontario to absorb."

Later he said, in part:

"We will continue to buy Gatineau power, but so far as the other contracts are concerned, when this bill passes the House as I hope it will, they will have been terminated."

In a statement last night, Premier Hepburn declared the move would not affect Ontario's credit one iota." "The bonds, he added were not of Ontario government issue. "These are bonds sold as a result of a very improvident deal between Hydro and the Quebec Power Companies."

The government based its action on the claim, that the contracts have entered into the Commission without the consent of the municipalities it served, contrary to the Power Commission Act, and without regard to the provisions of the Hydro Electric Power Act. Further, the contracts obligated the Commission to purchase over a long period, large quantities of power generated without the Province of Ontario, regardless of whether or not the said power was desired or could be used by the said municipalities.

The announcement of the introduction of the bill in the Assembly gave impetus to the downward movement of senior securities of the four Quebec companies involved in late trading here yesterday.

As a result of the heavy repercussions developed in Province of Ontario circles, bids for which virtually disappeared. Traders withdrew to the sidelines.

Conservatives at Queen's Park today were reported to be preparing for a battle to a finish with the Liberal forces to halt the bill. There was talk even of a filibuster, a political device which has been used in a major way in the Ontario Legislature in the last 10 years, veteran members said.

RENUNCIATION OF WAR RESOLUTION PASSED BY HOUSE

Motion Introduced by H. Bourassa, Great Nationalist

ENGLAND TO LEAD

Speaker Regretted Entrance of Russia Into League of Nations

Ottawa, April 2 (CP)—War clouds may gather over Europe and armaments increase but Canada stands firm on a policy of peace. By unanimous vote the House of Commons has reaffirmed Canada's peaceful intentions to the world. A resolution proposed by Henri Bourassa, independent member for Labelle, declaring anew Canada's repudiation of war as an instrument of national policy and adherence to the Briand-Kellogg peace pact, was adopted last night.

Mr. Bourassa pleased for the application of Christian principles in international affairs and regretted the admission of Russia to the League of Nations. To establish the brotherhood of man, begin by establishing the fatherhood of God, he declared.

Although there was dissent from some of Mr. Bourassa's remarks, there was no dissent from his resolution. Hon. Hugh Guthrie, minister of Justice, endorsed it either wholeheartedly it might have been construed as a vote of want-of-confidence in the Government. Liberal leader Mackenzie King also approved, and C. G. Powers, Conservative leader, and Miss Agnes Macphail only woman member added their voices to the peace chorus.

Canada has supported the League of Nations from the beginning, said Mr. Guthrie, and there is its rightful place on its councils. He thought Mr. Bourassa had criticized the League with half-hearted praise. What could any country do, he questioned Canada should withdraw from the Geneva institution.

Mr. Guthrie also entered a defence of British commonwealth and British diplomacy and expressed the confidence that the people of the world will follow the simple way of Canada to proclaim neutrality in a war; but would not guarantee that the United Kingdom became involved. He added, however, that should war was declared, notwithstanding our neutrality, our munitions might be liable to be destroyed, our shores bombarded and our cities might be bombarded by enemy ships."

An investigation of the arms, ammunitions industry was proposed by Hon. Mr. King, who suggested there be set an example to other countries in the Empire by appointing such committees of this business and its three to be made. Government was the surest guarantee for peace, he said, and he realized the greatest menace to peace in the disarmament of Canada was the fear that one man could place his country in a position from which it would not retract without recourse to war.

SIGHT OF FLAG STIRS PATRIOTISM

Mrs. H. B. Anderson Now in Florida Tells of Thrill of Meeting Britons

A voice from the Sunny South comes to the editorial sanctum—so to speak—of the Ontario, and we turn on to the large family of readers to whom the Ontario Intelligencer is just as necessary each day as the entertainment provided by the family menu. Just a letter and some verses from our own poetess, Helen B. Anderson, which speak for themselves:

225 Dellmar Terrace,
St. Petersburg, Florida,
March 26, 1935

The Ontario Intelligencer,
Belleville, Ontario.

We have enjoyed enjoying the winter here in the Sunny South, amid the flowers and fruits, but we miss the finest and friendliest people, even than the best that is British cruiser, "The Danae" had stopped at Miami in Tampa Bay, and that Canadians would receive a welcome on its decks, our hearts were thrilled to meet "our sin folk" of Mother Land, and to salute the dear old flag.

Hence the following lines:

TAMPA BAY

The breeze blows over Tampa Bay,
The sunshine decks its broast,
The waters sweep, a boundless blue,
And white sail dot the waves rest;
The sea-gulls wing the waters o'er,
How daintily they float,
And flashing boats and handsome
Ride gaily, side by side.

But look! beyond the harbor bar
A sterner sight we see,
And proudly from its highest mast
Old England's flag we hail;
How cheering to our British hearts
In this far foreign land
To see again the British flag
And greet a Britton's hand!

Then forget foreign lands to-day fair,
And foreign friends newer true,
O, Kinsmen of the British Isles
We yield our hearts to you.

Helen B. Anderson

THE PRINCE IN HUNGARY

The Danubian Review which is published at Budapest under the auspices of the Hungarian Frontier Readjustment League, contains in its February number which has just been received at this office a leading article, headed "The Prince of Wales in Hungary." In this issue this paper pays the highest tribute to the heir to the British throne. Here is a sample of the goodwill which His Royal Highness has established.

"It was a great compliment to Hungary that the Prince should have learned to dance the national dance of the Hungarian people; and it thrilled every Hungarian heart to read of the zest with which he threw himself into the spirit of Hungarian life.

"No doubt, the Prince—unconsciously, perhaps—was drawn to Hungarian life and Hungarian art by the spell which that life and art never fail to cast over strangers visiting the country. But in his case we would fain believe that the cause of the sympathy lies deeper still. A something in the soul which defies definition.

"However that may be, we feel and know that Hungary and the Hungarians are fully conscious that, though outwardly a stranger, the Prince was inwardly at home among a people who have never ceased to regard the Englishman as the incarnation of ideals which they themselves would follow and realize."

The Review reads further as follows: "that Hungarian blood is running in the Prince's veins; that his maternal great grandmother was a Hungarian Countess, Claudia Rhedey, and that he can claim descent also from St. Margaret of Scotland, whose daughter Matilda wedded Henry I of England."

Everywhere throughout Hungary the Prince won the hearts of the people and a sojourn which was intended to last but two days reached almost a week. Hungarians spoke of the charm of his personality, the geniality of his converse and the ease with which he acclimatized himself and made himself a home in the Hungarian atmosphere, endeared him at once to all Hungarians.

The editor of the Danubian News draws a dream picture of the Prince looking out from the rooms overlooking the majestic Danube. "Perhaps he thought of that day some nine hundred years ago when the Abbeling ruler of the Hungarian court and settled in the country which was to be the home of the Princess Margaret, of blessed memory, who later became Malcolm Canmore's bride. Perhaps he dreamed of the glamour which a little more than four centuries and a half ago encircled the royal castle in Buda and had made that city the meeting-place of the flower of European chivalry and European art."

This is the impression the Prince gives everywhere he goes. So fine has been his training for the high office he holds as Prince and heir.

The charm of His Royal Highness is felt in whatever land he moves.

TOURIST ENTERTAINMENT

If the people want tourists to come, the country must be prepared for them, said Mr. Leo D. Dolan of Ottawa, speaking before the Chamber of Commerce on Thursday night on the tourist problem. And he so impressed his hearers with the importance of the job of entertaining tourists and so profiling by the spending of some share of the three hundred million dollars which is expected to pour into Canada this year of which at least one hundred millions may come into Ontario, that an immediate body was appointed to organize an united body for this part of Ontario. This organization will be effected immediately so that it may go to work.

The people must realize that Canada is a land of immense appeal to those who do not live here. No other country has so many advantages as Canada can produce. Mr. Dolan called it the world's greatest playground.

He made another important plea—that is for Canadians to be native and natural, distinctive, not imitative in foods.

Those who would like to see modernism rampant in every nook in the country received a blow from Mr. Dolan who advised them not to modernize too much.

The people themselves here are those who will do the most to help build up the tourist trade. It requires the careful inculcation and coaxing which succeeds with hospitality and courtesy. Over-charging spells death to any enterprise and such an institution as the tourist trade can easily be frightened if men and women do not realize that the tourist must be well treated.

Mr. Dolan's visit to Belleville is going to do a good work in stimulating the forces into activity.

"TWO-WAY TRAFFIC"

Right Hon. Walter Elliot, Minister of Agriculture in Great Britain's National Government, spoke the other day in Swansea, Wales. His audience was of South Wales business men interested in the coal, steel, tinplate and shipping trades. His speech, as reported in the South Wales Evening Post, held one paragraph that Canadians should study:

What paid for the anthracite trade that was one of the big features of the trade of Swansea? By an Ottawa agreement the Canadian bacon trade of 200,000 cwts. had expanded to 1,500,000 cwts., was reaching toward 1,750,000 cwts., and could extend to 2,500,000 cwts. It was a two-way traffic: bacon for coal, and coal for bacon.

Two-way traffic; in the two words the British Minister of Agriculture told it all. On two-way traffic depend the present usefulness and future value of the Ottawa trade agreements.

What Ottawa provided for all the peoples of the British Commonwealth of Nations was a great set of opportunities. Some of the opportunities were wasted at the time through the niggling of politicians incapable of seeing over their own political back fences. Too many of them have since been lost in meek surrender to the selfish stupidity that, here as elsewhere in the Empire, demands that its own small and immediate interests be safeguarded, however great the general loss. But many chances to make Empire trade serve the good of all the people of all the Empire still remain. How much may yet be made of those chances depends upon the two-way traffic.

That, to serve its purpose, the traffic must be two-way is a truth that, though still hidden from many men on Ottawa trains, is plain enough to the average citizen of Empire. It is, for example, so plain in Belleville, Ont., that Belleville has established its own Empire trade group, whose motto is "Two-Way Traffic."

How much the group, under the chairmanship of Captain W. E. Schuster, has already accomplished is told by the Belleville Intelligencer:

Belleville district is now known all over Wales, because of the Belleville Trade Group movement. It will soon be known all over Britain.

So potent has been the appeal that a Welsh M. P. is to bring up in the British Commons the question of exchange trade with Belleville Trade Group.

In a world anxious to discover ways out of the present economic situation, the Belleville Trade Group movement to build up an exchange trade between Wales in particular and the Old Country in general with this portion of the Province of Ontario has found a practical method to set the world aright, its members believe.

Belleville has seen the light that has not yet illumined Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto and Toronto. It knows that Empire trading should not be confused with horse trading. When leaders in politics, agriculture, commerce and manufacture in this and every other part of the British Empire learn the lesson that Belleville can teach, the outlook for Empire trade and for the Empire's people will be good.—Toronto Globe.

WRECKER TENANTS

It used to be a common saying before the depression that few people could tell whether the occupant of a house was the owner or not by its external appearance. If the lawn was tidy, the wood-work painted, the garden nicely laid out, then you knew you were looking at the place of a home-owner. On the other hand, if the building was falling into disrepair, weeds abounded and the property had an altogether unkempt appearance, you were pretty sure that that house was rented.

It was not always true, of course, but it happened to be true in enough cases to make the observer deduce this rule from general experience. The untidy or down-at-heel appearance of many rented dwellings often is due partly to the reluctance of the landlord to spend more money upon repairs than he has to, partly to the carelessness of tenants. The good tenants, the people who fulfil faithfully the obligations they have undertaken, are gems. Their happy landlords have no doubt about these tenants' ultimate destination, any more than miserable landlords have of the destiny of those tenants who imagine they have a perfect right to wreck the property.

Fear of the wrecker tenant has resulted in an unwillingness on the part of experienced landlords to take relief tenants. They are afraid that what they gain in rent will be lost many times over in what they will have to pay out in repairs. Most people who belong to that unfortunate class which has property to rent have sad and bitter experiences of the wrecker tenant, who is seemingly possessed of neither mercy nor conscience.

The Welfare Board's desire, then, to notify all relief tenants that the cost of any repairs necessitated by them will be deducted from the relief they receive will cause landlords who now have relief tenants to utter prayers of thankfulness and remove a not unreasonable prejudice against relief tenants in the minds of other landlords. There is only one way in which you can move the wrecker tenant and that is through the pocket. He is deaf to all appeals to justice and fair play, and honour is a word not to be found in his lexicon.—Hamilton Spectator.

JUST SO, LIGHTLY

Just because love goes away,
Need we be so bitter?
If some charm would make it stay
Would the sparrows twitter
With a gayer note, to feel
April's blithe returning?
Would the tulips buds reveal
Brighter candles burning?

Just because love may depart
For no valid reason,
Need we fancy Earth will start
Fading from that season?
Foolish to be so bereft,
Heart, so heavy-laden;
Just this lightly love has left
Many a man and maiden!

SEES ALL, KNOWS ALL, TELLS ALL, for a price, claims the modern fortune teller, past, present future—but no one can dig deeper into the past and bring up more interesting bits of real news than Editor Dick Morgan of the Brockville R. and T. In a recent issue Dick dished up the following paragraph, just a few lines but columns could be constructed around it. Just give your imagination free rein, and wonder if the ship's sailing ship, no doubt, ever managed to get around the Horn. If they got to California, if they found gold, if they ever returned, or were they murdered by the outlaws who infested the trails leading out to civilization from the diggings? How many different avenues of speculation open from the sailing of the clipper barque "Rising Sun" from the port of New York in 1849? However, your imagination is as good as ours and here's the paragraph in question:

1849—Neil Mathie, Josiah Davies, Samuel B. Clarke, and James O'Neal, all of Brockville, sailed from New York in the clipper barque, "Rising Sun", for the California gold fields, via Cape Horn.

RADIO LICENSES ARE DUE AGAIN. Every owner of a radio receiving set is taxed two dollars per year to pay for the Radio Commission which has to do with all things relating to radio broadcasting in Canada. The Government also keeps a staff of expert "trouble shooters" who go about investigating complaints of man-made interference with radio receiving. Because of the two stations, CNRT and CFRB, Toronto, but both are placed so near powerful United States stations that they are generally drowned out altogether. The Radio Commission could get these stations placed in an isolated position where reception would be as clear at night as it is by daytime but they seem to be doing something to justify the expense of the organization. The interference is particularly acute with old type receiving sets which simply have to take a United States' stations after eight o'clock at night or tune out altogether. United States stations are being allotted more power and new allotments are being given air waves apparently regardless of the rights of Canada to some small space on the air waves. Radio-conscious folks here who have to listen to Jimmy Long when they would rather listen to a Canadian speaker feel that something should be done about the nuisance at once—or else scrap the Radio Commission entirely.

FRED DEACON, JR., who with his bride, has just returned from a tour of the British Isles and parts of Europe, states that the thing that impressed him most on his travels was the Scottish National War Memorial, Edinburgh Castle, which proudly, though modestly, records the great service to the Empire rendered by the Scottish officers and soldiers in all divisions of the Great War effort, land, sea and air. The Scotch may be a "dour" lot, have little to say, but whatever they do they do well, and there is no finer War Memorial in the whole world, or one that will last the ages with dignity and honor, to compare with the Scottish War Memorial.

Letters to the Editor

Editor Ontario Intelligencer;
Dear Sir,-

Will you kindly allow space to ask why the existing eyesores are allowed in different parts of the city. There are many small blocks where the back of one lot is on one street and the front on another, where some of the residents consider they are at liberty to dump anything they wish on the street at the back of their lot leaving old garbage cans and boxes on the street from one end of the year to another, till them up there, then some hungry dog comes along and oumps them over, the owners of the old cans and boxes never have time to clean up more than half the refuge. The unfortunate citizen the front of whose lot faces the back of his neighbour has that disgusting spectacle to gaze on whenever he looks out his window or door. Why does not our Sanitary Inspector round those people up? Have been told where he has made visits people promise to keep their garbage in their own lots instead of the street. However, as soon as he is out of sight the same disgusting practice is continued.

Have we no bylaw on that point, if not, one should be passed immediately and protect citizens who are trying to keep their homes back and front looking respectable.

Thanking you for space and hoping the existing nuisance will be remedied.

Taxpayer.

COUNCIL REFUSES TO RENT OILER

the matters back to committee for further consideration or until the estimates were struck.

"This is a question of a grant to the South End Club, while not of a large amount should be further considered," said Alderman McCreary. "I have considered the estimates for the year as yet and there is lots of money to take care of. The South End Club is a worthy institution but they have taken up a private subscription and then are asking the ratepayers to subscribe through a grant. We are only milking the cow and if for one would like to see this grant referred back until the time anyway as the estimates are considered."

Alderman Safe — "I agree with Alderman McCreary."

Mayor Tice—"In committee you pass this recommendation and in forty-eight hours you come back and want to rescind this motion. On the strength of the promise of this council, the South End Club officers have obligated themselves to a certain work and have already started the same and then agitation is thought to stop the grant."

Alderman Guthridge — "The members of the South End Club received from me a subscription and then they came back and ask us to give away the ratepayers' money and I am against this grant at this time."

Mayor Tice—"I consider they are as much entitled to a grant of $200 as was the ball club and I am in favor of a grant to the ball club and also in favor of the recommendation now before the council."

Alderman Thompson — "The South End Club is open twelve months of the year, the members are doing a good work, while the ball club only provides entertainment for a few months of the summer. I think the club is worthy of the grant and I am willing that way."

Alderman Domenico—"Put the motion and the question can be settled in a minute." The vote was then taken on the lease recommendation and was carried seven to six, the chairman of the committee voting in favor of its recommendation.

When the recommendation came up for the grant of $200, Alderman McCreary again spoke to the motion and appealed to the business sense of the council: "I think it is absolutely right to vote away the money without consideration of our tax rate," said Ald. McCreary. "I think we have treated the South End Club well in the past year. I am a member, heartily in favor of its objectives and they are doing a commendable work. I have taken part in their selling activities and have liberally subscribed to the petition, that was circulated for the purpose of providing money to move the club house but I was under the impression that if the citizens subscribe, then business would not be asked of the council for a grant. I am opposed to this grant and I think we should be refused."

Club Doing Good Work

Alderman Arnott:— "I consider the club is doing a real work and the officers have devoted their time to put it across. We have never had anything in the past to help them. They deserve helping hand. The club entertains unfortunate citizens during twelve months of the year and the members are putting Belleville back on the map in a selling way and soon she will be back to the position occupied many years ago, when boats from this city went abroad and won races. Personally if the council sees fit to grant money to the baseball club, then the South End club is entitled to the same consideration. The work, that is proposed, will beautify the spot and is respectable deal of the built."

Alderman Barlow—"I feel well towards the club. I did not know the extent of their operations but have had investigated and as a member of the committee to grant this lease, I looked over the work and was surprised to see the objective, that was laid out. If they improve the lot as suggested, it will be a great benefit and if we can afford the grant to the ball clubs we can give a grant to this organization."

Alderman Guthridge—"I agree with the speakers previous but we have lots of other places to put our money. I think the ball club grant was all right for it entertains a large number and brings in a certain amount of revenue."

Ald. Wills in Favor

Alderman Wills: "Go down to the waterfront any Wednesday afternoon and you will see several hundreds lined on Victoria Park watching the races free of charge. While nine men are providing entertainment on a ball field, probably forty or fifty are deriving recreation and providing entertainment in sailing. The Club is a worthy one and should be supported with a grant."

Alderman Cushing: "There is no comparison between the South End Athletic Club and the ball club. The ball club advertises Belleville in all corners of the Dominion, while the South End is only a local organization. I think we should not give the grant this year until we see how we are coming out on the finances."

Alderman McCreary: "Those who spoke in favor of the grant are not telling me the advantages of the organization for I know of it and sympathy with their work but still I am opposed to this grant at the present time." This ended the discussion and the vote being taken the grant was given. The next discussion participated in by the members was the awarding of the contract for sills for the firemen, which was given to the firm of Wood and Robertson, the ordinary sills to cost $22.50 and the Chief's sills to cost $23.50.

Alderman Thompson opened the debate by declaring: "I do not see why the same firm should have this contract year after year. I have not seen any samples of the cloth that was to be used. I understand the tender was the lowest but not that that same other firm could have been granted the job."

Alderman Hill: "Samples have been around the hall for months and the Alderman could have easily seen them. The committee looked over the cloth and the same was guaranteed to them. This is the lowest tender and the committee so recommended."

Alderman Domenico: "I want to voice my opposition to this tender. Last year did not the city pay two or three dollars more a suit over the lowest tender?"

Alderman Hill: "That is quite correct but a poor bunch of cloth was submitted and we took the best for the money."

Alderman Safe: "The price was the lowest and although it is not the right thing to give the same firm the contract year after year, I think the committee used good judgment in their decision."

Alderman Thompson: "I am still not convinced."

Truck Not Rented

Although the council agreed in committee to allow the oiling truck to be rented out for the season at $5 per diem, when it came to this work, the members did a right about face in council and cancelled the recommendation. The motion, that caused a debate was "that the city oiling truck be rented to Mr. S. Coleman for four months from May 1st on condition that Mr. Coleman furnish city with property and public liability insurance and also furnish bond to the satisfaction of the city, condition and to pay as rental one dollar a day while said truck is being used." The truck was to be employed to drive the truck and also that City Solicitor be empowered to draw up the agreement." After discussion the motion was lost.

Alderman McCreary: "I have had some experience with trucks and if we have no need for the machine let us sell it. I question the legality of the city renting the city's property to an outsider and we are liable to get in all kinds of trouble. This is a big question and I would like to have the advice of the City Solicitor on the matter. We have fixed the truck up and put a platform on it and then we bought a spray pump for it so that the truck but now we are going to rent the truck out. It is doubtful if it comes back in as good a condition as given."

Mayor Tice: "Did you Alderman McCreary, as Chairman of Waterworks, rent the thawing machine to Gotrychille?"

Alderman McCreary: "No only as a service."

Derive Some Revenue

Alderman Safe: "The only reason of renting the truck is to make it pay. We will not have work for the truck all summer and as far as the condition is concerned, it would have to be in good condition or it would not operate. I think it is a good deal for the city and we can make no less than $1,000."

Alderman Domenico: "I voted for the recommendation in committee but I have switched in my views since. I have heard these explanations. I have had some experience with trucks and who is to pay for the tires and I understand the tires for the truck will cost about $400.00. If there is any mechanical trouble, who is to pay for that? Lots of things could go wrong and we would be in hot water for the tires."

Alderman Foley: "I agree with Alderman McCreary. At first I thought it a good place to get some money back but I think now the City Solicitor should be instructed to look into this thing and report to the council."

Alderman Barlow: "This matter must be disposed of tonight because the truck remains to go out and get work if he can get the truck." When the motion was put the council voted against any action being taken in the matter. The truck will not be rented.

Council Rescinds Motion

A motion recently passed granting Glen Allen, secretary treasurer of the Stewart Warner Alemite Athletic Association, the use of the curling rink for the season for a price of $50.00 was rescinded by the council at their meeting as the city is contemplating disposing of the building by sale. The same for the plowing gardens for the unemployed will again be in effect this year but the plowing will only be done where gardens cannot be spaded. The cost on plowing the gardens will start in the near future and it is expected that a large number of the unemployed will take advantage of the city's offer. The produce, that can be grown in the summer on these plots helps materially to tide the families over the winter.

The Belleville Anglers' Association was granted the use of the City Hall auditorium for the night of April 17th. At that time a moonlight ramble will be held of the anglers in the city and district, while slides and moving pictures will be shown. It is also expected that an address on angling will be given and discussion as to how to preserve the game fish in this district. The local organization is a live one, with a large membership and all are interested for the pure love of the sport.

All able bodied men, who are now receiving vouchers for relief will be instructed hereafter they may be required to do a certain amount of work for the amount of the voucher, was the motion, that was passed in committee. Ald. Alderman Chapman was given the right to purchase a lot on the west side of Dundas street for $100.00 providing a two storey building is erected that will conform to the by-laws affecting that area. Under the head of inquiries, Alderman Domenico asked "what has become of the butcher by-law?" and the Mayor replied that the matter would be finally settled before the butchers went on the market next fall.

There were no motions but as Aldermen Guthridge and Domenico retained the yeas and nays on questions voted on in the council, Alderman McCreary moved that the council refer back to take the vote, which was passed. Alderman Guthridge asked for the yeas and nays on the grant to the South End Club and they were recorded as follows: Yeas—Tice, Arnott, Barlow, Foley, Harvey, Hill, Thompson and Wills, and Nays—Domenico, Guthridge, McCreary, Cushing and Safe. On the motion to purchase sills from Quick and Robertson asked by Alderman Domenico, the vote recorded was, Yeas—Tice, Arnott, Barlow, Cushing, Foley, Hill, McCreary, Safe and Wills, and Nays—Domenico, Guthridge, Harvey and Thompson. There being no other business the council adjourned.

Co-Builders of Canada

THE early part of the present century saw a great movement of immigration to Canada. Visions of opportunity in the new land brought thousands of energetic citizens from the British Isles and other parts of the world.

Today, these people and their descendants form an important part of the Canadian nation. Many of them are now looking to foresight when they became policyholders of The Continental Life Insurance Company—foresight which assured protection of their families against death, the education of their children, and security of homes and living during their later years.

This same service of The Continental Life Insurance Company is available for you and your family today. There is a representative of The Continental Life Insurance Company in your community. Behind him stands an all-Canadian organization, operating on a plan which has won goodwill and friendship throughout the Dominion.

ANOTHER LONDON TRAFFIC INNOVATION

Residents of the Camden Town section of London robbed their eyes when they came upon a Victoria crossing a few mornings ago and saw the centre neatly railed off by stanchions and chains. This is the latest traffic innovation of Mr. Hore-Belisha, transport minister fame, whose job is to reduce the pedestrian death rate. The idea of these rails is to keep the pedestrians from leaving the sidewalk in the centre of the block, making them cross at the crossing only. Though a fine factor for the man who walks, it proves tiresome to the motorist who will have difficulties in parking his car.

QUINTE DISTRICT TOURIST PLANS

Delegates From Various Centres Will Meet Here on April 9

Tourist possibilities for the Bay of Quinte region were discussed at a meeting of the special Tourist Committee of Belleville Chamber of Commerce held Monday afternoon with Chairman E. V. Illsley in the chair. The meeting was a follow up of the general meeting recently held, sponsored by the Belleville Chamber of Commerce, at which representatives from various sections of the Bay of Quinte region were present to discuss ways and means of making the attractions of this district known to the vast army of tourists who will visit Ontario this summer and every summer. On that occasion Leo D. Dolan, director of the Canadian Travel Bureau, at Ottawa, a government undertaking to attract tourists, to Canada, was the guest speaker. The naming of the Special Tourist Committee of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce grew out of the general meeting in order to have a body charged with carrying out the work of linking up with the publicity commenced, publicity efforts in attracting tourists.

Chairman Illsley outlined the policy of the committee which was to work from the viewpoint of the entire Bay of Quinte district rather than from that of any one part or particular section, to co-ordinate the efforts of the entire district in the work of making known the outstanding attractions of this district for tourist consideration—to do the work nearest at hand in making present visitors welcome, inducing them to prolong their visit here, and at the same time developing a continuing campaign which will extend beyond the present season and bear fruit next summer.

Letters were read from the Deseronto Chamber of Commerce, Tweed Community Club and other organizations throughout the district urging immediate action on the lines laid down generally at the recent general meeting in Belleville and promising active co-operation.

It was decided to call a general meeting of delegates from all parts of the district to be held at Belleville Tuesday afternoon, April 9, at 2.30, in the Chamber of Commerce at Belleville, to arrange a plan of action.

As it is estimated that millions will be spent in Canada this summer by visiting vacationists from the United States the Special Tourist Committee of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce will be pleased to have suggestions from all interested in the best methods of attracting tourists to this district and inducing them to prolong their stay. The Dominion and Ontario Governments are doing good work in inducing tourists to Canada, it is up to the Bay of Quinte district to get a fair share of the business. Suggestions may be addressed by Mr. E. V. Illsley, chairman of the committee and can be left at the Chamber of Commerce offices or communicated to him personally.

6 PRISONERS AT JAIL START TO HOUSECLEAN

Annual Spring Cleanliness is Put on Corridors

Pails of disinfectant, whitewash and paint, brushes and brooms in hand a dozen prisoners engaged in the regular spring housecleaning at the Hastings County jail this week is bringing a new freshness and gladness to the formerly drab and dingy corridors of the interior cell blocks. Scrubbed, thoroughly with the disinfectant first, and then painted, the cell block and corridors are now a pleasing white, trimmed with a pleasing brown. At the present time a total of 6 prisoners, all male, are incarcerated.

WARNING TO ONTARIO INTELLIGENCER READERS ABOUT "B.O."

ONE of the most common mistakes made among men and women is the belief that "white collar" people are never guilty of "B.O." (body odour). It is often assumed that only manual workers, or those who are active physically, can be victims of body odour.

But this belief is decidedly untrue. For any doctor will tell you that everyone—regardless of the work he does—perspires at least a quart a day, even during the winter when the perspiration may be invisible.

The guilty rarely know the truth

The tragedy of "B.O." is the fact that the first one to offend is usually the last one to know. For we soon become used to an ever-present odour and don't realize it's there. That is why so many people in every walk of life offend unknowingly.

Millions of men and women have come to realize how foolish it is to take chances when there is a soap like Lifebuoy. For Lifebuoy's purifying, deodorizing lather ends "B.O." quickly—protects you against offending.

Wonderful for complexions, too

Lifebuoy's bland, abundant lather agrees with the skin as no other soaps do, say millions. It penetrates deep into the pores, coaxing out dirt and clogged waste. It stimulates, soothes and refreshes.

And it's so mild and gentle the most delicate complexion thrives on it. Scientific tests made on the skins of hundreds of women show that Lifebuoy is more than 20 per cent. milder than many so-called "beauty soaps." Use Lifebuoy and watch your skin gain healthy radiance.

WHAT MONTH IS THIS?—It's spring, but Lou Little's Columbia football squad rehearsals are a reminder that fall is coming.

Correct Manners

Announcement Party

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I have just received my first engraved invitation. It is an invitation to a party announcing the marriage of a girl acquaintance. Consequently I am puzzled over the following questions:

1. No answer is requested on the invitation. Should I answer it? 2. The young lady has been secretly married for over a year. I have known of her marriage all the time, but have not as yet given her a wedding gift. Should I take or send her one now? 3. The party is to be given at the home of the girl's parents. Should I wear a formal dress, as the invitations are formal. If not, what type of dress would be suitable?

T.

1. If the invitation reads "requests the pleasure of your company" or words to that effect, it is taken for granted that you will answer it, either accepting or regretting. And since it is a formal invitation, you should make your acknowledgment formal, that is in the third person. Like this:

Miss Alice Mary Thomas
accepts with pleasure
Mrs. George Graham's kind invitation for dinner
Tuesday, the first of May at eight o'clock

2. It would be best form for you to send your wedding present before the party. 3. The degree of formality of the invitation suggests the degree of formality of attire. So you should wear formal attire.

BRIDAL SHOWER

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My two sisters are to be married soon. It will be a double wedding. I am to be bridesmaid to the younger sister. Would it be proper for me to give a shower for my older sister if there is to be no shower given for my younger sister, or would it be necessary to give a shower combined for my two sisters?

A Reader

It is not considered good form for a close relative of the bride-to-be to plan a shower for her. But if you are willing to disregard this social suggestion, then I think that you should give the shower in honor of both sisters, since this is to be a double wedding.

EXCHANGE DANCES

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Will you please tell me if it is correct, when a number of couples attend a dance, for each couple to dance with other partners, or dance with the same partner all evening? 2. If one's partner is dancing with someone else, is it proper for one to dance with a young man who is not with the party?

Thank you

1. Each couple dances with other partners. 2. Yes.

Marking the Linen

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am not clear as to what initials are used in monograms on linen. I have been married a short time and am starting to purchase linen to use when I am in my own home.

R.

Since you are already married, you would use the initials of your informal name. That is, if your maiden name was Florence Smith, and your last name is now Rice, the initials that you would use would be F S R. If you use only one initial (although this is not so good as to use the three initials) you use the initial of the last name of your married name, R.

CORSAGE?

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Is it proper to send a girl a corsage when taking her to a dance at a hotel? 2. If the girl wears formal clothes, is it permissible for the boy to wear a light suit or a sport suit?

A.

1. Yes, this is the proper and gallant gesture for the young man to make. Not strictly necessary, of course, but generous and friendly and courtly. And the gals love it. 2. No, this type of clothes would be terribly out of order. The young man should wear his Tuxedo suit anyway, and, if the occasion is a strictly formal one, his tail-coat.

Keep Health To Hold Off Beauty Ills

Expert Declares Building Self Up Is Best Insurance Against Years

(The Beauty Box)

Gloria Stuart

She knows the formula for delaying the marks of age.

By Helen Follett

Many of the beauty ills of middle age can be avoided. At 35 or 40 a woman should get a running start, beat old Pop Time at his horrid game of changing faces.

The best way to take out an insurance against the havoc of birthdays is to build for physical and mental health, keep cheerful, retain youth's interest in outdoor life, eat wisely, don't rush at a pellop all the day long.

Most particularly it is necessary to have an eye on one's neck. Necks are weak-willed and go slumpy if they aren't given attention. Watch them and dry them, cream them and pat them. Twist and turn the neck to strengthen muscles.

Do your calesthenics like a good girl, and you will have grace, handiderness of outline, resilient muscles.

Are you being kind to those "twin stars" that are so convenient for flirting purposes? You must take care of your eyes.

Night and morning baths with hot water then with cold. After the completion has been creamed during the bedtime beautifying half hour, give a light smoothing to the eyelids. One's neck is not an ship the pause pads that have been diped in it witch hazel.

Fashion Flashes

By Alice Alden

(Copyright, 1935, King Features, Inc.)

Mother and daughter are both well-pleased when they go shopping nowadays, for clothes made for youngsters are just as smart as a-fluffy fashions. A delightful coat for an eight-year-old is in a soft wool that mixes brown and beige threads. The collar is of beige and brown striped satin and fastens with a cord and pompom tassels.

No more lines in your forhead if you want to sport a hat of the bonnet type. A new model in which reveals the forehead of navy blue felt with an irregular brim has said a mustard colored flower placed under the brim in the center of the forehead line. Soft folds of French blue velvet trim the crown.

A perfect match in the color of fur and fabric is found in a soft suit of novelty wool crepe in rhubarb is found with a collar and tuxedo revers of ⅴ dyed in exactly the same shade.

Just one warm day will bring out all the new ⅴ'ring dresses. A nice new dress is in navy blue sheer woolen with a mock bolero opening over a vest of yellow linen striped with navy. The stripe of navy is also used for the flaring collar and the cuffs on the wide wrists.

Never enough fine pastels frocks in the wardrobe of the busy woman. A charming model is in a Paisley print in black, yellow, blue and green on a Chinese red background. The soft petal collar extends into a round shirred yoke with a drop-shoulder line.

There's a scoop to the brim of many of the new bonnet type hats—a wide, generous forward sweep. This line is evidenced in a bonnet of brown toyo straw with a deep red and white bellflower ribbon trimming. The brim is fluted in front.

DIAGNOSIS URGED IN EARLY STAGE

Dr. J. W. S. McCullough, Chief Health Inspector Speaks in City

"The present day despair and terror in respect to cancer is similar to the despair and terror which 30 or 40 years ago existed in respect to diphtheria. While there is today a despair and terror in respect to cancer, yet the measures for the treatment of cancer are infinitely superior to those for the treatment of diphtheria before the year 1895. While there is no complete treatment for cancer, research into this affection is far more advanced and the prospects for a cure infinitely better than the corresponding prospects for diphtheria, typhoid and tuberculosis forty years ago," said Dr. John W. S. McCullough, Chief Inspector of Health in Ontario, addressing an audience in the Y.M.C.A. last evening under the auspices of the W.C.T.U. Dr. G. S. Cronk, M.O.H., introduced the speaker.

"In most of the countries of North America and in Europe, there are centres for cancer treatment with well-equipped staffs of pathologists, physicists, physicians and surgeons, the trained to carry on research work with the closest co-operation. Cancer work has become a specialty. It is no longer the work of the general practitioner; it has become a highly specialized branch of treatment.

Delay in Diagnosis

"In every country there is a lamentable complaint that most of the cases of cancer come too late for effective results in treatment. This situation is being met abroad by well-trained campaigns of public education and by better training of medical students and of those proposing to specialize in cancer work.

"Prevention in cancer is as necessary as prevention in other diseases. Much can be done in this direction by education and by periodical examination of persons after 35 years of age.

"Another matter of importance is the follow-up of cases. In every clinic an elaborate record of cases should be taken to keep in touch with patients and to bring them back to the place of treatment at intervals for years until all possibility of the return of the disease is past. In some countries the expense of transportation is borne either by the government or by the local authorities.

"During the last century medicine has won signal victories over many diseases. Most of the victories have been in connection with germ-caused diseases. Cancer is a disease of another category. Its actual cause is unknown and it brings a 10 per cent. toll upon adult humanity. It is no respecter of persons. Never has the problem of the nature and cause of cancer been more widely and scientifically attacked than today. The surgeon and the radiologist are collaborating with increasing success in its treatment throughout the whole world of cancer research there blows a new air of hope and expectancy.

Increase of Cancer

"There seems to be little doubt that cancer is on the increase, but the real extent to which statistics point. There are a few reasons why the total increase is apparent. These are:

(1) the better records of today.

(2) the greater skill in diagnosis.

(3) the increase in the number of people of the cancerous age.

(4) the better education of the public in preventive medicine of all kinds, which enables the layman and woman to appreciate the earlier signs of the disease.

Statistics of Mortality

"I suppose you are not fond of statistics, and I shall burden you with only sufficient to convince you that there is an alarming increase in this affection. Beginning with 1914 the mortality rate for cancer in Ontario was 69 per 100,000 of population. In 1932 the rate was 94.6, the last year (1933), 110.

"During the last decade the rate of increase has been nearly 20.0 per 100,000 of population, or a relative increase of 25 per cent. For certain regions of the body, the stomach, the intestines, and the female organs of generation, the increase has been particularly marked and is in comparative accord with that shown in most countries. The actual loss of life from cancer in Ontario has, in the aggregate now reached 4,000 and the total number of cases cannot fall short of 12,000.

"Thousands of reports of cancer have been accumulated, all tending to show that this disease in its humanity is almost never hopeless; that cures have been obtained in increasingly the most futile cases, and that the greatest obstacle to the improved treatment of the disease is the mental lethargy and the hopeless attitude of the general public.

The Early Signs of Cancer

"The early signs of cancer are frequently obscure. In many there is no apparent tumor. Most cancers are painless. They are painless until their site causes pressure on nerve filaments, or interferes with the function of an organ. But usually there are danger signals. There is a sore, say on the lip, the tongue, or inside of the cheek, which fails to heal; there is the red flag of hemorrhage from the lower bowel or the internal organs of women; there is the lump in the breast, the continued hoarseness from a growth in the larynx; the protracted indigestion which fails to respond to the usual remedies. These are facts which should be matters of everyday knowledge. Any of these signs should be regarded with the gravest suspicion and every opportunity taken to prove or disprove their association with cancer. Neither patient nor doctor can afford to gamble on the chances that any single one of these signs is an innocent one. Nothing should be left to chance. Every available means of diagnosis, under such circumstances, should be resorted to, and the investigation of such signs should be pursued until the question of cancer or no cancer is solved.

"It is a very great misfortune for the human race that cancer in its early stages is not often accompanied by pain. If cancer were only as painful as a toothache from the start, thousands of those who procrastinate until the disease is too far gone for curative measures, would be relieved of their troubles and cured of their disease.

Modern Treatment

"The chief resources in the treatment of cancer are: Surgery, X-rays and Radium.

"Of these resources, that of surgery has long held the field, and surgery remains the most potent agent of treatment in cancer of the stomach, of the intestines, the fundus of the uterus, and other abdominal organs, though this field is being somewhat invaded by irradiation either as an active or an auxiliary to surgical treatment; it is still the best resource in cancer of the larynx and oesophagus, but in these fields also radium is taking a share in the treatment of cancer of the breast, surgery holds the chief place. Here again radium and X-rays are widely used in auxiliary treatment.

cumstances the executors did not feel it should give effect to the words written on the documents and envelopes without the authority of the court. The question for the court was whether the executor was bound to give effect to the dispositions indicated by the writings.
"What difference would this make in the aggregate of the estate?" asked Mr. Justice Makins.
"About $8,000," replied Mr. Donnan.
The estate apparently aggregates about $65,000," said His Lordship.
Acting for residuary legatees, Mr. A. Payne, K.C., contended that the writings on the statement and envelope were of no effect. "In my opinion," said Mr. Payne, "what the deceased attempted to do was to release arrears of interest to January 1, 1934, and I submit that a release by the deceased in 1931, that there must be consideration. As to the alteration of the terms of interest, my submission is that the promise is without consideration and without effect."

Announced Intentions

C. A. Cameron, representing mortgagors and note makers, who would benefit from the documents left by Mr. Cooke, said that Mr. Cooke had written on October 10, 1933 to various mortgagors and note makers announcing his intention to reduce interest rates for 1934 and 1934.
"There does not seem to be any doubt as to what his intentions were," commented Mr. Justice Makins, "but I think there may be a difference between what his intentions were and what he succeeded in doing, according to the law."
Mr. Cameron told the court that Mrs. Cooke died shortly after her husband and that the couple left no children.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL
"Dames"

The Most Gorgeous and Spectacular of all Musical Comedies is Our Next Request Feature

"Dames," which opens on Sunday at the Capitol by special request on Wednesday only is more than a musical; it is the most striking stage spectacle imaginable. It is more than a musical spectacle; it is a marriage of camera mechanics and stage mechanics. It has a real plot; three beautiful girls and eight trained dancers than have, ever been gathered in any one motion picture; it has six song hits; it has six of the screen's leading stars.
Joan Blondell, Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler head the all-star cast, which includes Zasu Pitts, Hugh Kibbee and Hugh Herbert, the three leading comedians of the screen.
Busby Berkeley was responsible for spinning the musical numbers which really baffle description. Three hundred dancing girls, appearing in the music of mechanical contrivances that move in many directions with many novel innovations in camera angles, make the numbers as unique and sensational as they are intriguing and beautiful.
Keeler has Joan Blondell appeared more beautiful nor more fascinating than as the wise cracking, gold-digging chorus girl who makes trouble for everyone with whom she comes in contact and who finally wins an eccentric millionaire, played by Hugh Herbert, whose admiration in life was to correct the morals of everyone but himself.
Guy Kibbee, as the millionaire, would be beneficiary of the millionaire, gives a hilarious performance, and Zasu Pitts as the strait-laced wife of Kibbee, is a real screen.
The love interest is furnished by Ruby Keeler and Dick Powell, who can act as well as they can sing, which is superlative praise.
The other parts are excellently played by Arthur Vinton, Phil Regan, radio's "Singing Cop", Sammy Fain, Arthur Aylesworth, Johnny Arthur, Lelia Bennett and Berton Churchill.
The "Kaleidescope Number" in which the theme song "Dames" is sung, and the "Spirit of Broadway" in which comes the song "Eyes for You" completely sum up this production.
Warren and Dubin, Fain and Kahal, and Dixon and Wrubel are the three leading teams of songwriters of today. They are responsible for the original songs written especially for "Dames." They are since left the theatre whistling them.
In all, "Dames" is one of the finest, cleverest, cleanest comedies screened in many a day; it is the greatest of all screen spectacles to date, and makes good its producers claim to be the master of all mammoth musicals.
Several clever and amusing short subjects will be shown at each performance preceding the feature attraction.
Complete shows 2.30; 7.15; 9.15.
Last Times Tonight
"Zills of The Gods," with May Robson and Fay Wray and "The Personality Kid", starring Pat O'Brien and Glenda Farrell. Du Barry oatmeals tonight. Come early and avoid the crowd.

AT THE BELLE
"Mississippi"

W. C. Fields, Dean of Film Comedians Starred in Comedy Lead

As the "biggest liar on the river" and the champion calliope player of seven continents, W. C. Fields, dean of film comedians, plays the new starring role in Paramount's fun-filled musical romance, "Mississippi" coming to the Belle, Wednesday, for three days, matinee daily.
A medley of song and entertainment, centering about Fields, the picture stars the famous crooning with Bing Crosby and Joan Bennett.
Crosby plays the part of a Yankee youth in the old south of crinoline days who falls into disgrace and loses his sweetheart because of his unwillingness to duel with every belligerent stranger.
The Old Commodore takes Crosby in tow, and between them they soon establish a reputation for the latest "Singing Killer", the most dangerous man with the sweetest voice on the father of rivers. Crosby falls in love again, this time with a girl who abhors duels, and then the commodore and Crosby are forced to unravel the reputation.
One of the largest production numbers of "Mississippi" is written about a novel arrangement of that favorite of all river songs—"Swanee River." Hundreds of Dixie coons songwriting team composed four new tunes which Crosby introduces in this picture. They include "Soon" and "It's Easy to Remember".
Directed by Edward Sutherland from an adaptation of the play by Booth Tarkington, "Mississippi" features Queenie Smith, star of the Broadway stage, and the Cabin Kids in the supporting melody roles; and Gail Patrick, John Miljan, Fred Kohler and Claude Gillingwater in featured dramatic roles.
The March of Time

The most sensational motion picture innovation since sound pictures superseded silent pictures, "The March of Time" monthly feature film series, has been booked for the Belle Theatre tomorrow, Thursday and Friday, according to an announcement made today by George J. Forban, manager of the Belle Theatre.
The Belle Theatre management takes great pride in presenting "The March of Time" motion picture feature to Belleville and vicinity audiences. The title, "March of Time" is undoubtedly familiar to everyone who owns a radio, for this Friday night presentation of news dramatizations was voted by radio editors the most outstanding radio broadcast program on the air. The motion picture feature, "March of Time" is a further development of this type of program, with all the vitality of the March of Time pictures give to the telling of a story.
The publishers of TIME, the weekly news magazine, producers of "March of Time" on the air, have formed a new company to produce exclusively the "March of Time" feature. All the resources of the magazines, its editors, its wealth of information, its news-gathering forces, and in addition a world-wide staff of photo reporters will be available to the film feature. This is a twenty-minute picture dramatically presenting the true story of seven or eight interesting important world events. "The Tyrland Premiere" an outstanding novelette in color, and Edwin C. Hill in the Belle latest News Flashes will also be exhibited.

WALL STREET CLOSE

NEW YORK, April 2 — (AP) — After the Rails and Utilities had displayed a steady to firm tone in the early stock market dealings today, late selling in the metals tended to unsettle the list.

U. S. Smelting suffered a decline of some five points. Cerro de Pasco and McIntyre Porcupine yielded about a point each. Wilson & Co., preferred dropped five, while Armour preferred and Case sagged nearly two each. American Telephone, Consolidated Gas and North American gave up their gains and Santa Fe, N Y. Central and Union Pacific replaced small advances with similar losses. Many issues were virtually unchanged. Title closing loss was easy.

TORONTO MINES

Heavy selling of San Antonio for a loss of 25 cents cropped up in 8 generally slow mining session, oldest secondary Golds were down 2 to 5 cents each this afternoon and the flyers recorded minor losses. Macassa, Pickle Crow, McIntyre, Hollinger, God's Lake, and Sylvanite were off 2 to 3 cents each.

Trading was slow in the Silver and Base Metals. Lower London prices for Silver was a contributing factor but quotations were inclined to hold. Eldorado around 1.32 was off 4 cents while Nipissing was unchanged and Premier strong. Noranda and Falconbridge boarded small recessions.

TORONTO MINES

TORONTO, April 2—(CP)—Trading on the mining section of the Toronto Exchange almost faded out for a time today after a fairly brisk opening but improved this afternoon. The Ontario Premier's announcement that there would be no provincial tax on gold was expected to stimulate the shares in the gold shares this morning but volume in the gold group was even smaller than the recent average. Prices were mildly soft but firm in the Silvers and Base Metals.

Price changes in the senior gold group were of fractional amount; aside from a drop of 75 cents for McIntyre, Hollinger was down and Dome and Teck Hughes slow and unchanged. Among the 32 Teck Hughes 420 changed hands at 2 to 3 cents were boarded for Prospectors Airways, Stadian and Gold Estates 420 while recessions of two to three cents came out for Sylvanite, Sherritt, Pickle Crow, God's Lake and Macassa.

The only other transaction of the selling except that it was somewhat above the previous. Most of the other utility shares were soft and the general tone of the market was heavy with losses predominating. The aggregate volume was small.

Beauharnois was hit by the declaration of a dividend payment dropping 1¼ to 23. Northern Power lost 3-4 and Union Gas ¼. Reconsolidated was firmer in the newly listed group, Nickle, C.P.R., Brazilian, International Nickel and British American Oil taking losses of ¼ to ¾ and Consolidated Smelters eased down 2 points.

Base stocks were inclined to firm up, only Dominion selling down slightly and in the miscellaneous group Standing Corpes and Bridge and Dauche traded at minor recessions.

Distillers Seagrams was the only gainer in the beverage group.

BOND MARKET

TORONTO, April 2—Trading was decidedly slack in the Toronto Bond Market today, with the Hydro Power group resulting from Premier Hepburn's move to revise contracts, causing lowering to their off. Losses of several points were general in the list.

Gatineau 5's were the most active and this afternoon were down 11-2 at 81.1-2 bid again 87 1-2 ruling yesterday. The low for the day was 80 3-4. Gatineau 6's 2 were traded at 6.3-4 down about 5 points and B's at 85 1-2 63 1-4, off about the same amount.

WALES AND WELSH PEOPLE DESCRIBED

David T. Jones of Montreal Bank Staff Addresses Y's Men

Y's Men last night heard a very interesting talk on Wales and the Welsh people, by Mr. David T. Jones, of the local Bank of Montreal staff. Mr. Jones hoisted a great in the ancient city of Carnavon. Wyleer, said the speaker, "is the home of the original inhabitants of Britain, the Celtish people, who were driven into the mountains and recesses of the hill country of Wales by the various invaders of the Islands." They have maintained an intensely nationalistic spirit, and have kept the ancient language in spite of intensive efforts to displace it. Practically all educated Welshmen speak both Welsh and English with equal fluency, and the former language is still used in the majority of the churches. Another interesting fact in this connection is the similarity between the languages of the Welsh and the people of Britany on the west coast of France, who are able to understand each other, without difficulty.

"Wales" said Mr. Jones, "offers unsurpassing scenery for the tourist, and a most interesting contrast in the customs of its people, to other parts of the British Isles." Its people are imbued with intense religious fervor, and the study of the Bible is very widespread, and with the well known love of music, which produces some of the world's best choirs and bands. The National Eisteddfod is a week devoted to massed singing and other forms of musical expression, in which orchestrations from all parts of Great Britain compete, and attracts many thousands each year.

Many relics of the Roman occupation still exist in their natural state in various parts of Wales, and places of historic interest abound. In closing, Mr. Jones paid tribute to Mr. David Lloyd George, Great Britain's war premier and an outstanding Welshman, and urged anyone of his listeners who might find himself in England or Wales a few days in the neighboring principality.

The speaker was introduced to the club members by George Pauline Walker, principal of Central Public School, and acted as chairman. Various items of club business were discussed before adjournment. The financial reports of several recent club activities and steady progress being made.

Dynamite Found Under Car Hood

Windsor, Ont., Apr. 2 (CP)—After recovering from the shock which had been stolen during the night, Aurele Doyle, 20, drove it more than a mile to where he worked today, and then discovered three sticks of dynamite, wrapped in black friction tape, under the hood of his car.

Muddy marks on the left front fender led Doyle to investigate and resulted in finding the dynamite lying on the pan beside the motor. At police headquarters about twenty pieces of tape were stripped from the sticks. Two fuses, about sixteen inches long bound together at intervals, were attached to the dynamite. The fuses had been hooked up to spark plugs but became disconnected. The ends were brown, as if the fuses had been set off and burned the powder at the tips.

Doyle was unable to give any clue as to who might be responsible for the act. Police estimated there was enough dynamite to blow up "a city block".

Guardians of the Desert

By TOM GILL

"Your survey shows it." Dick echoed the words. "Sart, I've just gone over that survey, duplicated it, too, for Ross and I've learned some thing that may or may not surprise you. Your survey was a lie, I half suspected it when I heard about the murder of the man who made it. A lie from start to finish. No child following your lines can ever bring one drop of water from Azure Lake to the Desert. To bring a ditch this far you would have to dig twenty-five feet into the ground, and part of that distance you'd have to blast through solid rock. In other words, Sart, your whole scheme was a damned fraud."

Sart's face had grown ashy and his hands clasping the saddle horn were white and bloodless with the intensity of his grasp. Black hatred burned in his eyes and showed literally they swept the horizon, and with a flash of understanding Dick knew that Sart was coldly calculating the chances of getting him two months down after the lonely desert trail would be no telling where.

Slowly Sart's eyes returned to Dick and his words carried a new ominous growl. "What's your game, Lowell?"

Dick leaned forward and now he touched the man's breast with his finger. "I'm going to get you, Sart." The voice was deadly in its earnestness. "I'm going to ruin you, and as you've ruined others. I'll brand you as the dirtiest swindler that ever robbed people of their confidence. Does that answer your question?"

A faint rustle sounded just behind Sart, a hairy arm moved furtively, but Dick was ready. Dick's left arm whipped an automatic from beneath his coat and the report of the heavy gun already half pulled from its holster.

Savagely Nick wheeled. "Put that up, you fool," he barked at the man. "Put it up or your slipped right into the holster. "There's no need for gun play with us."

CHAPTER TWENTY-SEVEN

Again he turned to Dick and once again his voice was quiet and contemptuous. "You know, I hardly believe you're going to make good that threat of ruining me."

"Try me."

"Because, for one thing, it would be a fatal mistake to underestimate me. When you attack me you attack the whole—Syndicate. Before I'm through I will take that out of your hide down do you'll. You know what will happen. We'll recommence operations use every means in his power to defeat you, and in the end I will with both of us against you there's no power on the border that can save you."

Dick nodded. He needed no reminder that Sart and his associates was cutting himself off irrevocably from his father. "I don't doubt for a minute that Dad will side with you," he answered sharply, "but I'll tell you this, Sart, that you'll never be driven penniless and powerless across the U. S. border. I'll show you how my head to your rotten schemes." Dick pointed in the direction of the lake. "And your people better get going now, and don't let your hands wander to near those guns; it's just possible Stub and I might misunderstand."

Sullenly the three men turned their horses and without a word started away. They rode rapidly and once they had attained a safe distance they halted and Sart turned and, making a wide detour about Dick and Stub, disappeared at a gallop toward the Bonanza ranch.

"That means he's bound for El Teso," Stub hazarded.

"It means more than that. It means that Sart is through. He's the scum of two nations will be headed toward us." With growing excitement Dick raised in the stirrups. "Come, we've got to make Verde before the word gets there."

Dark clouds were banking swiftly to the north as the night wind freshened, and the sun, lurid and red, had already touched the top of the Barrier. Quickly skirting the granite wall they turned their horses directly into the path of the dying sun and hurried on. At the end of a mile they jerked up a dim cow trail, and soon after they gained the Verde road.

Dick turned in the saddle. "I'm going directly into town," he called to Stub over the rushing wind. "You better drop off at the ranch. If Lolita is there tell her to leave at once. Tonight that ranch is going to be the most dangerous place this side of the border."

He handed Stub a key ring. "Open my safe. Take out all the papers you find. Put them in the car and drive into Verde. I'll be at the newspaper office." And as Stub touched spurs to his horse, Dick called, "Bring a couple of rifles, too."

"Damned if this don't seem like old times come back again," Stub chuckled, and was gone.

It was nearly six when Dick reached Verde. Barnes, in the inner office, sat before a pile of papers and seeing Dick he called, "I'm putting the old newspaper to bed. Be with you in two minutes."

But Dick had already closed the door and was standing against over his friend. "Will, tomorrow that paper's going to carry the biggest story it ever ran." Rapidly he told him of his survey and related his encounter with Sart.

"There's not a minute's time," he hurried on. "Sart will move fast and we'll have no more faster. His men are likely to be out in force tonight, and we've got two hours at the most before tomorrow's dawn. First, hold your presses until we have this paper in the morning paper. Next, gather together in the office every rancher you can trust. Once we let the whole countryside know what has happened, we'll have Sart on the defensive. I'm going to call a meeting of every man who owns a foot of land around Verde. We're going to organize, Will."

Eyes were shining with excitement. "For the first time we're going to serve notice on every gunman and bribe-taker in the entire border that this desert country is for the men who've worked and suffered here, the men who spent their lives building it up."

He stopped with a sudden recollection. "What was the phrase you spoke—Guardians of the Desert, isn't it? Well, that's what we're going to be—all of us, who rather than knuckle under. We're going to stand guard over this desert country until the last man who has a right to it is forever."

Quickly he seized a piece of paper. "Now, what men shall we phone? We need a dozen here, pronto."

The magnetic driving force in Dick's voice kindled an answering spark in Barnes. Excitedly he reached for a pencil, his deep-set eyes glowing.

"Here's the lineup," he said. "Barnes, of all, Ted Radcliffe. He's a power around Verde. Jim Price—we'll get him." In quick succession Barnes called name after name. He a dozen names to the list. He reached the telephone toward Dick. "You get the men, old son," then turning to the typewriter, added, "I'm now for the biggest story that ever broke in the border country."

In that same hour of the night, far up Copper Canyon a rider spurred his weary horse through the shadows of Headless Mesa and disappeared at a gallop toward the Bonanza ranch.

"That means he's bound for El Teso," Stub had said.

It means more than that. It means that Sart, the man who was prey the scum of two nations will be headed toward us." With growing excitement Dick raised in the stirrups. "Come, we've got to make Verde before the word gets there."

Dark clouds were banking swiftly to the north as the night wind

Dick, meanwhile, had been busy at the telephone, and soon in many an outlying ranch men were saddling their horses to ride through the night at the call of their chief. Before twilight heavy clouds had covered the horizon and now, without a hurried birth another night warning, a storm in the foothills, causing the cattle far out on the desert ranges to drift southward before its fury, seeking shelter in arroyo and behind stunted clumps of chaparral. By eight o'clock the streets of Verde were deserted, and the pungent smell of burning mesquite told of stoves being fed high against the sudden piercing blast of border winter.

But it's night was on, men began gathering back in the inner office of the press room. Grizzled, sunburned ranchers, young and middle-aged men who, by the very force of indomitable will had carved their homes out of the desert country. Clear-eyed, strong-jawed, toughened with years of steady riding, decided by a lifetime of contest, they stood about the room, talking in low tones. And as Dick's eyes took in that silent, resolute group, a sense of exhilaration swept over him. Here was, a feeling of close comradeship with these men, whose language he spoke, whose hopes he knew and shared. Again there came to him the heartening thought that neither bureau nor authority nor the hostility of nature itself could conquer this resolute unflinching desert breed. These men who by their very skills and the strength of their resolve had forced even the reluctant desert to yield them of its substance.

Our King and Queen on their Silver Jubilee

BORN with a paralyzed arm and an inferiority complex, Kaiser Wilhelm II. was brought up in an atmosphere of militarism and imperialism; he has been described as the man who seemed to be "mentally warped" on the subject of Germany and the sword, and the wielding of the German empire.

Personally, he was said to have been spoiled and ill-tempered. He many times vented his wrath against King Edward VII. and the British royal household. The Kaiser ascended the throne in 1888; King George in 1910.

British Kings seldom left their country prior to the reign of George V. But King George had visited India and in 1911, in May, on the occasion of the marriage of Princess Victoria Louise, the Kaiser's daughter, the King and Queen made an official visit to Berlin to attend the wedding.

It seemed that, however, the visit was made in an attempt to ease the growing animosity existing between the two houses, (Wilhelm was a first cousin of King George).

To-day's picture shows the King and the Kaiser reviewing troops at Potsdam; who would think that a few short months later they would be hurling human projectiles at each other's throat—one with blood in his eye, the other with tears!

Though the Kaiser eventually led Germany to disaster, he has never credited with having in the space of a few years, built Germany into a first rank military, naval, economic and political power. He had almost unlimited power in his own country and was before the war, perhaps Europe's most influential man. A man of keen intelligence, his early training had made of him a man who only for the closing of the switch to send the story of Sart's crime across the land. Mutely he pointed to the carnage about him.

"Gentlemen," he said, "this is the first time in the long struggle that lies ahead. Here is our answer." He reached forward and touch the switch.

A quick response a low hum pervaded the room.

One by one the rolls turned, the grim-present clicked, and in six other second long sheets of wet, fresh-printed paper bearing the story of Sart's perfidy were being fed into the rack before them.

The battle had joined at last.

That next morning brought history to the Verde country.

The word astounding that the ditch was doomed crashed like a bombshell among the desert ranchers. East and west, north and south along the border, and from foothills to the Mexican line. Wherever men rode after cattle or gathered in prospectors' cabins, the talk was of one theme only, and by noon stern faced, determined men were riding through the bowling country of Verde. Many had left homes half built and business enterprises only hope lay in the coming of irrigation. In Verde itself all the new buildings ceased for that day, and everywhere uncertainty and alarm gave way to crystallizing into black anger.

BRUTALITY IN PRISONS A MYTH SAYS SPEAKER

Major Buntin Tells of Reclaiming Work to Rotarians

SPLENDID TALK

Three young men stood in the prisoners' dock in Toronto police court recently. Little more than boys. One was afflicted with a twisted neck which affected his eyes and general health. The lads were accused of breaking seals on loaded freight cars, a serious offence. The Salvation Army took an interest in the accused, and the court, pleased the boys over to the Army. It was their first offence and their last. The boy with the twisted neck was given medical treatment and cured. A job was found for him and he is working steadily, a credit to himself and his family. This was one of the pictures of real life presented by Major Wallace Buntin, head of the prison and police court work of the Salvation Army in Canada, in addressing Belleville Rotary Club, Monday.

Brutality in prisons as charged by people, who had made Cook's Tours of places, of punishment and saw little more than a glimpse, with a bunch of keys and some cell blocks, was discussed by the speaker, who said that in all his experience and personal contact and heart-to-heart talks with prisoners he had uncovered no brutality and not one complaint from a prisoner of ill treatment.

"Prison Gate" work was started in 1882 by the Salvation Army, so termed because the Army's close as the Army was permitted to approach prisoners, while still under control of the prison management, becomes operative at the prison gate by Salvation Army officers, offered advice and assistance, and every effort made to get suitable employment for them so that they might become good citizens instead of lapsing into a life of crime, enemies across the land. Mutely he pointed to the carnage about him.

"Gentlemen," he said this is the first time in the long struggle that lies ahead. Here is our answer." He reached forward and touch the switch.

A quick response a low hum pervaded the room.

BRANTFORD ROOFING

Once upon a time it took a lot of effort to replace a worn out roof. And after the job was finally finished a host of bills would come in from all sorts of people who had all had a hand in the matter. For that reason people used to believe that patching was a whole lot easier and pretty nearly as efficient.

Today, however, there is a different story to tell. You deal with one person—you pay one bill—you get a new roof complete, without any trouble to yourself. All you do is telephone us, select the Brantford Roofing pattern and color scheme you like best and we do the rest. It hasn't a litter for weeks on the front lawn. ## Leafs Move to Preston Spa Resting Up for Series With Maroons for the Stanley Cup

Only Light Skating And Rest Ordered For Squad

SKATE AT GALT

Leafs Expect to Take Maroons in Important Playoff

By ELMER DULMAGE

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, April 2 (CP)—Astute Conny Smythe, whose Stanley Cup challengers for the most part do their voting as well as hockey-playing here, seems to have solved one of his major play-off difficulties. He keeps the Leafs away from their friends and neighbors.

In the manner of an English soccer team preparing for a cup tie, the champions of the Nations' Hockey League have disappeared from the Metropolitan scene to lay plans for meeting the Montreal Maroons later this week. They live in the quiet of Preston, Ont.

No one may telephone to ask about tickets for Thursday night's opening clash with the Maroons. They are reserved for the entertainment of Maple Leaf Gardens, which hasn't nearly enough tickets to go around. That's why Leafs practised in the Galt arena, not far from their hotel.

The mental attitude of his athletes began to concern Manager Smythe as soon as Detroit Red Wings came here and thumped the Leafs one-two in the Motor City, eventually winning the series. He noticed, among other things, how much better the club played in Detroit, out of range of telephoning friends.

Hurried to Syracuse

When the Leafs qualified to play Boston Bruins in the League title series this spring, Smythe hurried them off to Syracuse, N.Y., for a couple of days. Since the four-game triumph over the Bruins, Toronto boss wasted no time seeking some more quiet for his team.

More than 13,000 fans are expected to see the first Leaf-Maroon game here Thursday night. Cap to 15,000 in attendance at the second game Saturday night, and the rest of the league move to Montreal for two games, if two are necessary to decide the best-of-five series, and Toronto will get the fifth if they divide the first four.

The Leafs last won the Stanley Cup in 1932, defeating Chicago Black Hawks in the final, in 1933 they won the N.H.L. title at the expense of Boston but were beaten by New York Rangers in the International Cup series. They won a 104-minute overtime game from these Boston here and started the Ranger series 18 hours later in New York.

Expect Both Titles

Since only two teams have ever won the N.H.L. and Stanley Cup series consecutively under the existing arrangement—Boston in 1929 and Canadiens in 1931—the odds against any brigade scoring the double have been high until this year. But the Leafs suffered untimely an injury in the Boston series and will have had four days rest before taking on Maroons.

There was little reason to believe Smythe and Dick Irvin would decide to make any changes in the lineup, leaving young Nick Metz to play on the third-string forward line with Two Gully, Joe and Pete, fourth Boston game, and Harold Oelton. Bun Cook will be on hand for general duty.

Unless Miss Clancy, fiery defence veteran, should meet with an injury or Metz should fail to play as well as he did against Boston, Red Blair seemed unlikely to get into the series.

GOLF FACTS
NOT THEORIES

By ALEX J. MORRISON

I've been asked to give my opinion on the various grips. Clubs are now being turned out with all kinds of irregularities under the leather. Some have flat sides, others have raised sections.

All are supposed to enable the player to hit the ball better. Many of them do when first tried. But, sooner or later, these irregularities particularly where they affect the right hand, result in an attempt to force the club.

Nine times out of ten, when the player feels that he has a secure hold on the club, his wrists are locked. His secure hold collapses by the time he reaches the top of his backswing, or he sways through the ball without the necessary wrist action.

A perfectly round grip with the size so arranged that the portion held in the left hand is appreciably larger than that held in the right is best for all purposes.

THIRD TILT IN MONTREAL

Toronto All-Stars Even Series With Royals With 5-2 Win

Toronto, April 2—(CP)—Toronto All-Stars who have lost just one game in the 11 they played here this season, took over the managerial reins, very back on the Allan Cup path today after balancing precariously on the edge since last Friday.

From little "Shorty" Robinson on the forward line to big "Pud" Mitchell on the defence, the All-Stars still smarting from a 9-2 beating in Montreal Friday, stepped into Montreal Royals here last night and after a smashing, hard-checking struggle, skated off the ice with a 5-2 win. Victory evened the best of three games series at one each and forced a third tilt in Montreal Wednesday with the winner to meet Halifax for the Eastern Canada championship.

Back in February and early March, when the Stars were fighting for a place in the group playoffs, the team elected the elongated Ecclestone manager when their first mentor resigned. From that time on the Stars did not lose a game until they met Royals. They showed more spirit and turned in performing as individual stars, as had been their habit, they played like a well-balanced unit. The "Moose", Ecclestone is called, because of his size and bellowing from the bench in urging his hockey team on, was given credit for getting co-operation and a team spirit in the squad.

R. E. Orr Elected President Of Belleville Golf Club

Organization in Sound Financial Conditions Says Reports

R. E. Orr will head the Belleville Gold Club in 1935 after being duly elected into office at the annual meeting and election of officers of that organization at the Chamber of Commerce last evening. A good, big number of veterans and new members were on hand to swell the attendance at the annual meeting as an air of optimism graced the meeting throughout.

The gathering came to order at the call of retiring President W. H. Reeves, who gave a resume of the past year's activities following which he sincerely thanked the various officers of the club for their untiring efforts and material assistance in 1934. Mr. O. H. Scott, secretary-treasurer of the Belleville Golf Club read the minutes of the last annual meeting, all of which were adopted and received while the financial statement was accepted unanimously. Mr. Scott's report clearly demonstrated, that the club had enjoyed a successful season not only in competition, but finan cially and fraternally. The treasurer's report showed, that the club enjoyed a substantial bank balance, that was a credit to such a young and popular club. Mr. Scott was re-elected secretary-treasurer by a unanimous vote, no other nominations being even suggested.

Mrs. Kinnear Ladies Convener

During the election of officers, which followed, it was decided to name Mrs. (Dr.) Kinnear as convener of the ladies' section with the ladies meeting on a subsequent date to elect their own officers, committees and decide their own petitions. At the request of the ladies a resolution to include the president of the ladies' group into the club's board of directors will later be discussed. The naming of the lady officers will not take place until later this month and at the call of Mrs. (Dr.) Kinnear, the women's convener.

During the general discussion of the evening it was moved and adopted, that the club fees remain as in 1934, no advance in price being accepted, although considerable discussion was offered upon. Reports from the various retiring committees proved most acceptable and added an air of optimism. The greens committee through Jock Mitchell, the club professional, reported, that the greens had wintered in fine condition while extensive improvement had been already been started in the matter of improving low-fairways. Two years open golf day will be held slightly earlier and added competitions are being contemplated. The meeting closed with all members looking forward to an early opening of the 1935 golf season, more especially on the Belleville Golf Course.

The result of the annual election of officers of the Belleville Golf Club for 1935:

President—R. E. Orr.

Past President—W. H. Reeves.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

The local volleyball contingent to compete in the provincial playdowns in Toronto on Saturday were enabled to attend the O.H.L. championship game after all, if they were fortunate enough to have previously procured tickets. The local volleyballers finished second in the group, Peterboro "Y" advancing into the final round. In the group embracing the Belleville "Y" were Peterboro Public Schools second, Toronto Brookview third and Hamilton last. Competition was keen and the Petes were not awarded the title until the very last set had been played.

Now that all local basketball teams have been eliminated from provincial competition in all categories the much-talked of city championship series will be presented. The four major squads of hoopsters in the city have been included in the city championship series. B.C.I. will head the list with two teams, the "Collegians" entering both their senior and junior group champions with Belleville and Intermediates and the group champion Deacon A. C. Juniors going to make up the fourth team. The series will commence on Thursday night at the B.C.I. gymnasium.

This morning the draw for the city basketball series was made and we find four teams competing in a double header on Thursday night with the two ultimate winners clashing in the final game next week. Thursday night's draw reads as follows: Intermediates versus B.C.I. senior intermediates. The series will be a straight knock-out with the losers being eliminated and the winners going for the sudden death game for the city cage title. The series will commence and we do not hesitate in recommending these games.

Two weeks from tonight the first Golden Gloves boxing tournament ever held in the Bay of Quinte section will be staged when a hundred hopeful contenders will pour in Promoter Glenn Allen has cared to string the boots over and run a two-night show with the eliminations being played on Monday night and the finals on Wednesday. The tournament will be sanctioned by the Ring and all boxers throughout the Central Ontario region with the winners being eligible to subsequently compete in the provincial final Golden Gloves at Toronto.

On Saturday next the annual meeting of the O.B.A.A. is being held in Toronto and to date nothing has been done in relationship to the election of officers, annual meetings or appointment of delegates by either the Bay of Quinte group or the Lake and Hastings County junior league. Interest in the Bay of Quinte group is concerned, however, nothing can be done along those lines until President Charlie Louche of Trenton calls the clubs composing that loop together for the annual meeting. Only leagues that have organized, officially appointed delegates and paid their entrance fees may have a voice or a vote.

Judging from the general street talk about town the Hastings County League is only a myth with a name only. Last year the local Crystalcos were much too strong for surrounding junior competition, and the loop died a natural death. It is understood, that the newly formed Belleville Amateur Baseball Association is to sponsor and foster a senior loop in Belleville composed of nine or possibly four teams. The idea is to have the best play that can be mustered on the Exhibition Park following regular senior O.B.A.A. fixtures. (A splendid suggestion indeed). Of course if a local junior team is selected and they expect to compete in the provincial playdown a local league would have to be organized and officially entered in the O.B. A.A., before the parent body would consider junior baseball in this district . . . We understand that Art Young, of the B.A.A., is contemplating a visit to the annual baseball meeting in Kingston, if so the local diamond moguls would be well advised to name Mr Young as official delegate to cast their vote.

Some wonder, if junior baseball is worth while, but without hesitation in reply YES, it is. Apart from that it is a safe bet, that two ex-juniors will be cavorting about in senior uniforms in Belleville on their Queen's birthday. If a local junior baseball star is developed one player to the senior ranks per season, the investment in money is not an excellent one. On the other hand the youngsters are not encouraged and confidence and necessary moral in that department, baseball will die a natural death for lack of the right material. It must be remembered the very juniors of today are the potential senior players of tomorrow. So, boost junior ball is our slogan.

Congratulations are today due R. E. Orr and Ted Reeves in a single dent of Belleville Golf Club. Incidental the Belleville Golf Club met at their annual meeting and stated "its seldom one sees or hears such harmony as was manifested by those present. The club enjoyed a successful season in 1934, thanks to Past President Reeves, and his corps of assisting officers, he says, and judging by the crowds a bigger and better season in 1935. This golf club has forged a hard uphill fight for the past four years and today claims to be standing on a firm foundation A few of those present enjoyed an abbreviated round of golf last week end and are anticipating an early opening of the official season.

One of the questions asked at last night's meeting was why the Club should wait its annual field day so earlier in the season. "Let's get at it," came back the newly elected president, "the earlier the better (as good as done boys.) Jock Mitchell the genial pro up at the Belleville Golf reported, that the greens are coming on fine shape and he expected to open the course on two days ways to make the course the best in Canada." Mr. Mitchell, (Jock as we point out the air of optimism, that surrounds the Belleville Golf Club) Last night's annual meeting election of officers was held officially appointed delegates and getting down to "brass tacks" and discussing those lines until President Louche arrived. Two days each week along those lines until President Louche arrived. Two days each week along those lines until President Louche arrived. Two days each week along

Daily Short Story

"AIR RAVES"

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

By Leslie A. Hill

The clock struck seven, and Ann Holden dialed the radio station at which her husband, the now famous Dr. Ralph Holden, sent out a nightly broadcast that solved the problems of the heart-sick, the lovelorn and all those men and women who had trouble with and over their mates.

As a radio adviser, Dr. Holden—his title by courtesy of introductions only—was a wow. He made 'em sit up in their seats and pay attention. Now, Ann listened:

"Ladies and gentlemen of my unseen audience. The subject of my address tonight will be 'Jealousy.' After I complete this, I will answer some of the many thousands of communications addressed to me. The others will be answered by mail.

"In beginning my address I want to impart this advice to you. There is nothing more deadly to marital happiness than suspicion, for suspicion is the father of jealousy, and jealousy makes not only the jealous miserable, but also the object of jealousy. It is a two edged sword that kills love as surely as understanding and sympathy preserve it."

There was more, but Ann tuned out the station and sat quietly. She looked unseeingly at the radio. Her husband had said that—and said it with a note of conviction and belief! And yet, of all men in the world, he was the most jealous! She sighed and shook her head. Why were men like that?

Then she was startled out of her reverie by the ringing telephone. She knew it was her husband:

"Hello—yes, it was wonderful! No static. And you sounded so convincing!"

Within the hour, Dr. Holden clumped into the living room and sagged down in an easy chair. Now Ann thought he would begin. And he did:

CROSS-EXAMINATION

"How did you spend your day . . . where . . . who with . . . who did you see" . . . who with . . . and a million other questions. By the time Ann had faced and replied to the avalanche of questions, she was as tired as though she had dug ditches the whole day. Then even she began to lose temper. Her answers, she felt, bore a suspicion in her husband's voice. If she hesitated in her replies he would think she was lying. If she didn't hesitate, he would think she had carefully rehearsed her answers. She shook her head miserably.

At first, those countless inquiries had rather pleased her than not. They showed her that he was still in love with her—jealous of each minute that she was out of his sight. But after years and months she had wished to rebel—and would have if she hadn't loved Ralph, just as she did long before when she gave up her well-paid concert work to make him a home . . . to make him a home in a three room apartment . . . that make him the sole provider. That last was a great sacrifice. Men can't know what it means to a woman to give up luxuries that she might just as well have, just to allow the man to feel that his success is the only paramount thing in her life.

That belief had "made" Ralph Holden. Backing in her smiles and encouragement he had "crashed" the movie frontiers, and had built up a tremendous following that made him the highest paid advisor on the air.

As Ralph read his paper—after the inquisition—he sat silent, her hands folded quietly in her lap. At times, she looked at her husband and shook her head. Tears came to her eyes, and she brushed them away. She cleared loudly to clear her throat. And then she spoke to her husband, evenly, without emotion:

"Ralph, I want to talk to you. I heard part of your talk tonight, but I turned it out quickly. You spoke on Jealousy and told the radio audience what a terrible thing it is.

"You were probably snickering as you said this—you who have been so jealous of me. But you were right. You are so right that you will never approach the truth so close again.

ALL LOST

"In those words you lost me. You told me of jealousy — which I knew from heart-aches for months. You know I love you. You know I gave up my singing for you—and you know how I helped you with the success that you have now. But I cannot do on this way—day by day I face a cross-examination that would have made me leave you a hundred times if I didn't doubt—love you so much that I forced my pride to ignore your initials. Now, however, I am leaving you.

"With that she stood up, and walked calmly out of the room.

Ralph Holden's paper dropped to the floor. His mouth was open in astonishment as she disappeared. And then his face became a tor-mented thing of terror and despair. He jumped to his feet, and ran after her. On his knees, he told her of his love . . . what she meant to him . . . and promised—swore—that he would never be jealous again . . . The driving sorrow of his voice sent a pang to her heart. She lived him . . . and she could not cause him so much suffering.

They returned to the living room . . . in silence . . . and Ralph looked at her with adoration that he had always known . . . and she cried softly to herself . . . cried in happiness . . . for she felt at last, the shadow of jealousy had been removed at last.

The next evening, she tuned in on her husband's program again. What he said has no bearing on the story—but he called her up after the program was over. She answered:

"Hello—yes, it was wonderful. No static. And you sounded so convincing."

A few minutes later, Dr. Holden clumped into the living room and sagged down in an easy chair. He opened his mouth:

"How . . ." he began.

Then he stopped short. Fear shown in his eyes. A great fear that made him look fearsomely.

Ann Holden laughed.

"Dear . . . I'll tell you where I was," she said.

Ralph Holden looked abeyeish.

"Don't," he begged. "My nagging was just a habit—and my jealousy just a way of saying, "I love you."

This afternoon some lady came to see ma with a stawy looking little girl with skinny legs, and pink ruffles, and she was trying to neck out and called me back, saying Benny, I want you to stay in and play with little Jessica, and now remember, she's a delicate refined little girl, so play gently with her.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED—

In the foothills of India's barrier-mountains Pat thoroughly enjoyed the quick-passing days. Lady Cecil's hospitality was a joy to the motherless girl. There was hunting of the lesser native animals and night of entrancing beauty.

Roger Cecil was Pat's constant companion as the two became the best of pals. At his university, the young Oxford undergraduate had one befriended his classmate, a certain rajah's son, by defending him from the insults of a husky student.

In return the Prince invited Roger to visit his father's palace that summer. As the sultry season waned and Caroline Cecil prepared to take her young people back to the British post, there came a crested note renewing the invitation from the rajah's son.

The Prince urged that they come at once, for a Hindoo festival was to be held. Lady Cecil, desiring to see her friend the governor-general's wife, decided that she and Pat would accompany Roger as far as Delhi. So the Pates hurried Patricia toward unhappiness.

NOT A RHEUMATIC PAIN FOR 4 YEARS

70-Year-Old Man Praises Kruschen

A man who once suffered severely from rheumatism writes:—

"For a long time I suffered with rheumatism, and at one time was laid up for about nine weeks. About five years ago I was advised to try Kruschen. I did so, and have continued using them ever since. Kruschen did the trick, as I have not had a rheumatic pain for over four years. I am nearly 70 years of age, and feeling fine, and always able for my day's work—thanks to Kruschen."—A. P.

Kruschen dissolves away those needle-pointed crystals of uric acid which are the cause of all rheumatic trouble. It will also flush these dissolved crystals clean out of the system. Then if you keep up "the little daily dose," excess uric acid will never form again.

HEPBURN CHARGES DEFICIT IN 1934

interest on sinking funds deposited with the government and the other $92,975 for adjustment of interest.

The next item, said Mr. Hepburn, represented ordinary expenditure accounts held over at the end of the fiscal year 1933-34. The sum was $1,569,333.

From 75c to $118.53

Finally, the Premier went on, was a payment of $2,535,375 by the Agricultural Development Board to the treasury. Only $966,603 of that amount was interest and in taking credit as ordinary revenue for the total amount of $3,536,375 the ordinary revenue was incorrectly credited with $1,-530,940, he said.

He said revenues were over-estimated to the extent of $1,011,268. Also expenditures were underestimated to the extent of $1,934,029.

Mr. Hepburn went on to compare the per capita debt as of December 31st, 1934, the last Liberal budget was brought down to the per capita debt last October. In 1906 it was 78 cents and in 1934 it reached $110.53.

At the end of the Henry administration he estimated the debt had increased by $140,000,000 and then G. Howard Ferguson was premier. Redmond net public debt charges for the fiscal year April 1, 1923, to March 31, 1926, amount to $22,200,-056.

Referring to the government's intention to change the end of the fiscal year from Oct. 31 to March 31, Mr. Hepburn said the change would mean the government could present the main estimates based on present conditions and these could be used by the departments immediately.

Formerly they were not effective until seven months had elapsed. At the 1936 session, Interim accounts will be prepared and delivered for the nine months of the new fiscal year April 1 to Dec. 1, 1935, and a forecast for the remaining three months January 1 to March 31.

During the past year the Premier noted a steady easing in monetary conditions and said it was generally accepted the policy of the Bank of Canada would be to ensure a continuance of low interest rates. This, he considered, a necessity.

Insurance and Loan Companies

Dealing with insurance, loan and trust companies he said when one thinks of what they should and should not do, one must remember they were essentially fiduciary institutions, responsible for the safe and profitable investment of the savings of millions of citizens.

Turning to the various government departments the Premier first reviewed the newly-created department of municipal affairs. He said the government adopted a new form of municipal financial returns and intended collaborating with the bureau of statistics at Ottawa and municipal departments in other provinces to make possible the publication of statistical information in a comparative manner.

"Back-to-Beck" Policy Affirmed

The Premier said he was pleased to re-affirm the "Back-to-Beck's Published Owned Policy," as the objective of the present administration.

Details of the Northern Ontario System for the fiscal year 1933-34 was $115,414. The Eastern Ontario Georgian Bay and Thunder Bay Systems have, however, been operating profitably during the past year.

Finances of the Niagara System remained a source of anxiety to the commission, the Premier said, attaching over-purchase of electric power from Quebec contractors. Revenue was increased by less than $1,000,-000 during the past year but cost of purchased power alone increased more than $5,000,000.

"The present bill entitled the Hydro-Electric Power Commission Act 1935, now before the House, was designed to remedy the very unfortunate situation that now exists during this final approval by parliament and the Hydro-Electric System having been relieved of the crushing and impossible burden, will go forward to greater achievements," he said.

Through the Agricultural Development Board the government has completed 400 loans which were undertaken by the previous government and 400 applications for new loans have been received.

"We propose to continue to make loans and to order inspections immediately," said Mr. Hepburn. "We also plan to give close supervision through our agricultural representative staff and the inspectors employed by the board to all accounts which are in arrears."

At the end of October the board had assets of $56,773,286. Chief item in this figure was provided by mortage loans totalling $47,380,502. Farm properties taken over by foreclosure were valued at $2,304,-924. Among the board's liabilities were $49,600,000 in debentures held by the province.

"If the board is given power to consolidate indebtedness which would include taxes and insurance premiums and to capitalize such indebtedness and to postpone principal payments for a period sufficient to carry debtors over a difficult season due to crop failures and calamities such as hail or frost and to reamortize the new loan for a period not to exceed 30 years, we feel that this government is doing something of a very tangible nature and something which will relieve the heavy burden which a great many farmers are attempting to carry," Mr. Hepburn said.

Savings Offices Stay Open

"The Province has no intention of closing the savings offices in fact, as circumstances permit, the services may be extended," said the premier, referring to the Provincial Savings Offices. "There is no intention of going into competition with the chartered banks but I believe there is a place in our economic structure for the provincial savings offices."

Amount on deposit in the offices at the end of October was $21,449,-527, a decrease of $98,000 from the previous year. Since then deposits increased and on March 21 deposits were $22,006,983.

The Premier on taking office found certain employees, some of them married, received less salary than $50 a month. Adjustments were made.

ENGLISH CHILDREN FEEL BENEFITS OF SLUM CLEARANCE

Yesterday a layout illustrating what was being done in England to clear away the slums, showed a modern apartment house built to replace crowded shabby and unclean areas. To-day, photos of the re-housing work wherein new houses replace unwholesome tenements, are illustrated. In the picture at TOP a street in the slums of London is shown; children are forced to play in narrow streets where traffic is heavy and where sunlight permeates only for the briefest periods. Contrast this with the picture BELOW, where a new street has risen from the dust of the old. Flowers, gardens, plenty of room and sunlight and air give children a chance to live normally. Such houses as these are being built at the rate of thousands per year in English cities through government subsidy they are available to even the lowest wage-earner. A drive is being made for a similar scheme for Canadian cities and the federal administration is reported favoring a plan of subsidizing a similar rehousing and slum clearance plan.

GOLD STRIKE IN EDMONTON!

By CENTRAL PRESS CANADIAN

Edmonton, Alta., April 2— Not the hope of a "big gold strike" seems this year dwelling in the icy water of the North Saskatchewan river within the city limits. Along with a companion, he works only for the tiny bits of yellow metal they glean daily to keep them equipped with a good "grub stake."

Undaunted by more than two feet of ice and an equal amount of snow that has covered the river during the winter months, two gold seekers, Jack Thistle and Elvy Mickleson, have operated their home-made "grizzly" without a break except for a few days during the bitter cold spell which gripped Edmonton and district during February.

Thistle was formerly section foreman for the Canadian National Railways between Edmonton and Jasper. He worked for the railway for 12 years, then three years ago he was laid off. So instead of going on relief he went to work searching the river gravel for the gold dust and he has been at it ever since.

Mickleson, the partner, came to Edmonton in September, 1934, from his home at Swift Current, Saskatchewan. With a flair for mechanics, Mickleson designed and constructed an elaborate "grizzly" equipped with a massive scoop shovel made out of an old stove pipe which reaches down below the ice surface and grabs sections of the river gravel.

The "grizzly" has an intricate system of control wires and hoist cables which adds to the speed of operation. It has been placed on skis and can be moved at the whim of the owners to new locations. Later, when the spring arrives, the partners plan to equip the machine with a motor to improve its efficiency and also to pump water from the river which is now ladled by hand.

The gold seekers are now working not far from the parliament buildings, seat of Alberta's government and with Toby, their faithful fox terrier, may be seen hard at work almost any day of the week.

Just a couple of enterprising Canadians who refused to be made idle by present economic conditions As Thistle told one onlooker, "We may be down, but we're not out."

Cambridge, Mass., April 3 (CP). —Dancer at Massachusetts Institute of Technology are becoming more than just dancers—not the girl who attends them.

In the past few years the technicians have devised numerous scientific tests, some results of which they base the admission price for the evening.

For the spring informal dance next week, they have invented a "precisitherm-speedometer" as an instrument to measure the "spring fever temperature" of the young women who will attend. The students escorting girls with a "high spring fever" will be charged lower rates.

Several months ago they determined the value of chemicals in the girls' bodies as a ticket price basis.

Wildwood, N.J., April 3 (CP)— The bewildered juror was called out to make a big "pinch" at the home of Mayor Frank Bradley.

The jurist made the pinch without getting pinched.

Charleston, W.Va., April 3 (CP) —The bewildered juror looked at 12 filled glasses in the jury room and then at Judge Collett Littlepage.

"Just where, your Honor, am I going to sit?" he asked.

C.N.R. REVENUES DUE TO OPERATION UP $16,382,759

Cash Deficit Shows Decrease of Over Ten Millions

FREIGHT UP 12.3 P.C.

Orders Issued For Demolition of Old Units

Ottawa, April 3.—(CP)—The first annual report of the Canadian National Railway system since the board of trustees took control was tabled in the House of Commons yesterday by Hon. R. J. Manion, minister of railways and canals.

Hon. C. Fullerton is chairman of the board and other trustees are F. K. Morrow and J. Edouard Labelle, salient features of the report covering the last calendar year follow:

Gross operating revenue increased by $16,382,759.

Cash deficit after paying interest on debt owed the public, $48,407,900, a decrease of $10,547,488 below the 1933 deficit.

Freight revenues increased 12.3 per cent.

Passenger revenue increased 8.6 per cent., despite reduction in passenger train mileage.

Average freight train operated during 1934 with 1,535 gross tons against 1,512 in 1933.

Due to extreme weather in January and February, 1,000,000 pounds of coal consumed per 1,000 gross ton miles throughout the year was increased 1.7 per cent.

Expenditures additions and betterment were below the $3,985,- 287 authorized.

Co-operation by means of passenger train pooling with the Canadian Pacific and other measures were put into effect during the year.

During the year 336 miles of functionally duplicate lines were abandoned of which 296 were Canadian National and 242 Canadian Pacific.

Orders were issued for the demolition of 2,000 old units.

Co-operation by means of passenger train pooling with the Canadian Pacific and other measures were put into effect during the year.

Freight services in addition to the telegraph and express departments of the two systems, the report said, were facilitated with regard to amalgamation of the telegraph companies. In regard to the express companies studies were being made to determine whether increased consolidation of express and less-than-carload freight facilities would be the yield greater economies and present a more effective front to highway competition than separation of the two express companies.

Co-operation between the two railways was confined to projects undertaken by the joint facilities committee.

The trustees felt that for the first year as economy as well as possible toward maximum co-operation should be covered by amicable adjustment.

Continue Co-operation

The trustees announced their intention to continue along the line of co-operation with the Canadian Pacific based on amicable and free discussion. They expressed hope that reference to tribunals might be eliminated or if necessary might be confined to the smallest number possible.

Application had been made to the board of railway commissioners for leave to abandon 34 less profitable branch lines involving 547 miles. A number of other projects were under consideration.

For the first year since the consolidation the Canadian National Steamship hotel system in 1923 there was an operating surplus last year. The net income was $213,800 more than the year before. The operating surplus (total revenue less expenses and taxes) was $37,917.

Total passenger wage adjustments of the Canadian and United States lines of the system will increase the pay-roll during 1935 by more than $5,000,000. Of the 15 per cent. reduction in basic rates of pay, three per cent. was restored on Jan. 1, and a further three per cent would be restored May 1.

Pension contributory pensions plan was put into effect on July 1.

Orders have been issued for the demolition of a large number of units of rolling stock. This special retirement program will be in addition to the regular practice of rebuilding or replacing wornout equipment, but is considered to provide for an abnormal situation due to the depression, co-operation with the Canadian Pacific and the extreme length of the depression.

High Cost of Weddings Cut As 57 Chinese Couples Wed

(By Morris J. Harris)

(Copyright 1935, by the Associated Press)

Shanghai, April 3.—The Chinese Government today delivered a telling blow at the high cost of weddings when fifty-seven couples assembled in the city's municipal hall and were married in a simple ceremony, with General Pai-Chi-Chen, Mayor of Shanghai, officiating.

Aiming at setting an example of economy to the nation in accordance with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek's "New Life" Movement, the ceremony was devoid of all the frills and extravagance characterizing the traditional Chinese wedding.

To the labored strains of Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" played by a Chines brass band, the marriage candidates paraded down the crimson-carpeted aisle while a crowd of 1,200 persons, largely relatives, looked on.

The couples ascended the platform in groups of four, bowed three times before the statue of Sun Yat Sen, "Father of the Republic," bowed twice before each other and once to the mayor.

They then received brilliantly decorated certificates which made them man and wife. Each marriage was completed in two minutes. The Government charged each couple the equivalent of $7 for the ceremony, the price including the certificate and a gift to the bride.

This was in startling contrast to the customary Chinese wedding which sometimes throws the young couple into debt for life.

SCARLET TUNICS TO APPEAR AGAIN

Band of A. L. I. Will Dress as in The Old Days

Reminiscent of the brilliantly colored uniforms of thirty years ago, members of the Belleville Argyll and Light Infantry Band will present a striking picture on their first dress parade within the next week or so following the donning of new, bright scarlet tunics and blue trousers, piped with red stripes The new uniforms, according to the government, will be issued this week. It is hoped to complete the ensemble by an issue of white helmets in the event of failure to provide enough for the whole band the uniforms may be topped by blue caps. It is hoped by Bandmaster Ross Hunter to have the band attend the Canadian National Exhibition at Toronto this fall in official regalia.

A request for any old scarlet tunics or white helmets now in possession of local residents is being made by officers of the band to complete the fitting out.

Seal Crew Glum, Season is Poor

St. John's, Nfld., Apr. 3 (CP)—A glum crew of sealers came into port today aboard the Imogene, first of the Newfoundland seal-killing fleet to get back from a disappointing season in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Captain Al Blackwood reported 31,000 pelts, just 21,000 less than he had brought into St. John's in the big ship last year. Bad weather and bad ice struck hard at the fleet.

GATINEAU BONDS FOLLOW OTHERS TO LOWER PRICES

Sharp Decline Shown in Quebec Power Issues

LEAK PROBE BEGUN

Premier Hepburn Sees No Sign of Pact With Bond Holders

Toronto, Apr. 3 (CP)—Points were knocked off the Quebec Power bonds in today's trading on the Toronto bond market, losses reported till 12.30 ranging up to 10. As in yesterday's selling, the Gatineau issues held better than others, due evidently to the announcement by Premier Hepburn that in revising the power contracts, any needed revenue would be taken from the Gatineau concern.

Trades today were at losses of 2 to 5 points for the Gatineaus, three to five for the Beauharnois issues and 10 to 11 points for the MacLaren-Quebecs and the Ottawa Valleys.

The first quotations on the latter issues were only nominal, firm bids failing to appear. Ottawa Valleys were offered yesterday at 80 and today they were offered at 70½ with no bids.

Bond Trade Nervous.

The crash of power bond prices has caused nervousness throughout the bond trade and there is practically no business passing in the provincial and Dominion issues even at the lower prices that are being quoted.

MacLaren-Quebec 5½ sold around the 50 mark yesterday at 80½ compared with today's offerings at 60, the Gatineaus around 65 to 95 compared with today's prices of 60 to 80 and the Beauharnois 5½'s at 100 against today's price of 76 to 78. The Beauharnois 5's are off from 88 to 29.

Alleged Leak Probed.

Toronto, Apr. 3 (CP)—The Ontario Securities Commission today opened an investigation into charges of a leakage of news of the bill (Cons. Toronto Parkdale) there had been a leak of information that enabled a number of brokerage houses to unload their Quebec Power bonds and stocks before the official announcement of cancellation was made.

"The 59 dealers of the Investment Dealers' Association are to be interviewed," said J. M. Godfrey, K.C., Ontario Securities Commissioner. "Their records and telephone calls are being checked to start immediately and I, as Commissioner, am acting on the association, is co-operating with the commission."

Commissioner Godfrey said if the department obtained evidence that anyone sold a security recently within recent date, he would be brought before the commission and questioned under oath to see if there had been a leak.

Premier's View Point

Toronto, April 3—(CP)— Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn has said there "couldn't see any possibility" of arranging a conference with holders of bonds in Quebec power companies whose contracts with the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission are to be terminated by the province.

"We don't need the power and we are not going to take it," said Mr. Hepburn.

"But if the bondholders get together I'm willing to put up a fair proposition to cut the price of power or to reduce the amount to be purchased, or some other reasonable proposals," the Premier was asked.

"I won't go as far as that," replied Mr. Hepburn. "We'll wait to see what move they make if any."

Mr. Hepburn, before boiler-ing" he continued, "but if tomorrow the Ontario Hydro and I received the cost of power by 4¢ a horsepower, as we would have to do if we purchased from Quebec, there would be a howl from the other provinces. We have to choose between the two and Ontario industry can't pay more for power."

Sees No Committee

If power rates were increased sufficiently to pay for the energy from Quebec, Mr. Hepburn said, it would impose a total increase of more than $1,000,000 in Ontario's power costs alone.

It was expected the government's action would be discussed in caucus today.

The Premier said debate on the bill providing for termination of he contracts will start Friday.

Arms Situation On All Fronts

Anglo-Polish conversations ended in Warsaw tonight and a communique announced both Britain and Poland had agreed on the "desirability of maintaining close contact" on the European situation.

It was indicated both in Warsaw and Paris a wider and more flexible mutual security pact might be proposed in place of the Eastern Locarno, to which Poland is cool and Germany opposed, in its proposed draft.

Anthony Eden is on his way to Praha to wind up the British Securities exploration that cover Germany, Russia, Poland and Czechoslovakia. He returns to London Thursday and the calculation is that the council to be followed at the important meeting of British, French and Italian Ministers at Stresa, Italy, April 11.

Other developments:

Paris—The government having secured an overwhelming confidence vote was believed ready if necessary already had an air force as large as that of Great Britain.

Sir Charles William Cayzer, Conservative, asked whether Hitler during his conversations with the Foreign Secretary "gave any indication of the present size or strength of the German Air Force."

Sir John answered:

"Yes. In the course of these conversations, in particular, the Chancellor stated in general terms that Germany had reached parity with Great Britain in the air."

Debate Sought

Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald again rejected a request the House of Commons be afforded opportunity for a debate on the Arms situation.

Winston Churchill asked the Prime Minister whether in view of Sir John's revelation he would provide an opportunity for a debate "on urgent and serious matters," but Mr. MacDonald said the state of Parliamentary business was so pressing at the moment the Government was unable to set aside any special day for discussion. He suggested the opportunities might arise for questions on business of adjournment from time to time.

Discussion Over Air Fleet

Coincidentally a lot of discussion over the strength of the new German Air Force brought from Sir John Simon, Foreign Secretary, the revelation Hitler told him in Berlin the German Air Force was now equal to that of Britain. Previously, this assertion met with denials.

"In the course of the conversation," Hitler stated in general terms Germany had reached parity with Britain in the Air," Sir John told a questioner. But further questions brought from Sir John nothing but the statement his answer was correct.

London, Apr. 3 (AP)—A government spokesman said today a preliminary examination of British diplomatic conversations in Berlin, Moscow and Warsaw convinced the government a security plan with enforceable provisions for collective sanctions must be constructed during the forthcoming months.

Prahs, Apr. 3 (CP-Havas)—Capt. Anthony Eden, British Lord Privy Seal, is expected to arrive here tomorrow morning.

After his interview with Foreign Minister Edouard Benes, he will leave for Belgrade by plane in the early afternoon.

Hailan Paper Banned.

Berlin, Apr. 3 (AP)—The German authorities today banned the Italian newspaper, Gazetta del Popolo, for having stated Germany is planning to extend its aggression to Austria where, the newspaper said, the Reich intends to establish "a base of operations" against Italy.

London, Apr. 3 (CP)—Britain does not regard Adolf Hitler's "peace plans" as adequate.

The feeling in British circles, it was revealed today, is Hitler's schemes as laid before the British ministers in Berlin do not afford any solution for Europe's troubles.

The objections are so far from offering more security, they do not go even as far as the existing agreements, including membership of the League of Nations, strengthening of which is considered to be now France's immediate aim.

NEGLIGENCE COUNT IS DISMISSED

Hamilton Magistrate Discusses Question of Responsibility

Hamilton, Apr. 3 (CP)—"In the present case, to assume a guilty state of mind is logically to assume the second intended suicide since his own life was equally imperilled, and he did, in fact, sustain severe injuries," Magistrate H. A. Burbidge stated in magistrate's court today in dismissing a criminal negligence charge against Fred Carter of Toronto. The charge arose out of an accident on the Galt highway March 2 in which two women passengers, Norma Rodden and Barbara Hunter of Toronto, were killed and another passenger, Daniel Smith, injured.

"The fact the injured party dies is immaterial for the purpose of these sections where the charge is negligence and not manslaughter," His Honor continued. "It is said one of the young women killed was the fiancee of the accused.

"This regrettable case is another in the long list of automobile tragedies.

"The answer to the problem seems to be either in the discovery of fresh methods of removing the hazards incidental to automobile traffic or of altogether doing away with it, doctrine of mens rea and making the responsibility absolute."

CURFEW AT ORILLIA

Orillia, Ont., Apr. 3 (CP)—Children bells rang in Orillia last night for the first time in years. Town council has ordered the curfew sounded each night at nine o'clock. The action was taken on the request of the Orillia Women's Institute for "the best interests of the young people of the town."

Sir John answered:

LABOR SUPPORTS SOCIAL INSURANCE

Opposes Further Exceptions to Dominion Scheme

Ottawa, April 3 (CP)—Labor today through President Tom Moore of the Trades and Labor Congress opposed granting further exceptions from the Dominion Employment and social insurance scheme requested by departmental stores and the railways for head office and divisional clerical staffs.

"Our position," Mr. Moore told the Senate Banking and Commerce committee, "is there are too many exceptions now. In place of giving further exceptions employees of financial houses should be brought within the scope of the measure."

Mr. Moore condemned as "impractical" the proposal of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association that there should be given different assessments based on their volume of unemployment.

Flat Rate

The British scheme of "flat rate" contributions interpolated in the bill was acceptable to labor, he said. If this business of contribution were changed to one of a percentage of pay-rolls and earnings, abnormal risks would have to be made in the benefits to one of a percentage of earnings in place of a flat rate."

"There seems to have been a wrong impression given that inclusion of large departmental stores and distributive trades would add substantially to the cost of service sold," Mr. Moore declared. What Insurfinance could there be for increasing prices in the several hundred dollars sales a clerk made each week to provide for his 25 cent contribution to the insurance fund? he asked.

Non-Manual Exemption

"Would you favor reducing the exemption for non-manual workers from $2,000 as provided in the bill to $1,500?" M. E. Macgregor, Meighen, Senate leader, questioned.

The Labor head disagreed. Workers earning between $1,500 and $2,000 have suffered almost as much from the depression as others and required the benefit of unemployment insurance, he said. Many of them had lost their homes and their life savings and were in no ability to benefit from relief given to those entirely destitute.

E. E. Fisher, Canadian Pacific Railway counsel, appearing for his company and also for the Association of Canada which represents both the C.P.R. and the Canadian National, suggested the proposal would make it clear in the railway running trades that the normal monthly work was fixed by the number of miles run and not by the time employed, these exceptional months not be regarded as unemployed during lay-off periods once they have performed their normal monthly mileage.

Revenue Stamps

Another change suggested on behalf of the railways was to provide contributions by employers and workers under the act would be made in stamps and the unemployment insurance commission may provide for payment at each calls for contribution by means of revenue stamps only.

Mr. Moore, President of the Trades and Labor Congress, said that certain other minor elements in labor would have liked improved

Rev. A.G. Sinclair Ordained At Victoria Baptist Church

Minister is Praised on Excellence of His Examination

SERMON ON 'CROSS'

In the presence of his congregation and a host of visitors, the council of the Peterborough Association of Baptist Churches, and a mother whose eyes glistened with pride and joy, Alexander Grant Sinclair, pastor of the Victoria Avenue Baptist Church, was ordained on Tuesday evening into the ministry of the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec at the Victoria Avenue Church.

Solemnity and religious fervour were the dominant notes of the ordination which occupied the whole afternoon and evening. The afternoon session was taken up with the examination of the candidate by the council. A brief statement of how he became converted and of his decision to enter the ministry was asked of him. Graduate of Acadia, a Godly mother and the fine manner of her upbringing of her son given by Mr. Sinclair. This was, he said, one of the reasons for his decision. The candidate was then called upon to make a statement as to his beliefs, and a questioning of him was conducted by the council. In a quiet but thorough manner he answered the questions with sincerity and efficiency.

Cross in Every Day Life

"I want the cross placed where Jesus placed it, right in the middle into every day life," said Prof. Orvis preaching on the text, "Take up Thy Cross."

Nobody in Jesus' day wanted to carry a cross. It was the last word in the old world for degradation. Tradition of the cross dates to Calvary. There was a tradition that no Roman citizen should be put to death on the cross. "Paul had changed it," said the preacher. "Logic never answers a problem. Love did it. It took love to take the shame from the cross, to place it in the great cathedrals of architecture, on the steeples of church and on our walls. Everywhere have been erected crosses of love

T. EATON COMPANY WOULD EXEMPT RETAILING TRADE

Higher Cost Price Seen if Retailers in Insurance Scheme

C.P.R. PROTESTS

T EATON ETC 1JYm

Ottawa, April 3—(CP)—Requesting the retail trade be exempted from the Dominion Employment and Social Insurance scheme, the T. Eaton Company, through W. G. Mills, yesterday gave the Senate Banking and Commerce Committee figures purporting to support the contention of stability of employment in the retail business.

About 75 percent of the company employees had been with the Eaton concern for more than two years, Mr. Mills said.

Contributions the company and employees would have to make under the plan "would be out of all proportions to the benefits which would be received," he said. In one year, Mr. Mills calculated, company employees would receive $133,879 in benefits but would be contributing $152,340 under the plan.

Sees Cost Rise

The company also would be contributing $216,340 yearly. Total contributions of the Eaton employees, the Eaton Company and the government under the scheme would approximate $519,216 a year with the benefits received just $133,879, the employee amounting only to $133,879, Mr. Mills said.

He said the cost would have to be added to the selling prices of certain manufactures.

The T. Eaton Company had made a survey prior to its appearance in regard to the Dominion plan, he said. Of those canvassed no male employees favored coming under the scheme while the women employees were divided on what the plan was about and did not understand it.

C. P. R. Protests

The clerical service in general and in the offices of railway companies should be exempted from the Legislation, R. J. Pinkott, Ogdsdhn, Canadian Pacific counsel said in presenting views of the Railway Association of Canada, representing both the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National.

"In support of our request, exception of railway clerical staffs in general and divisional offices of staff pointed out the terms and conditions of service and the nature of employment in the case of employment are for all practical purposes the same as under the clerical staffs of financial institutions who are exempted from the Act." Mr. Pinkott said.

Employment among the clerical staffs of railways is of a stable and had just as much constancy as in the case of insurance companies, for instance, who were not brought under the Act, the railway counsel claimed.

"It is stated the reason you put in some stable employments into this bill is to sweeten the pot and insert the cost o certain classes" rē added. If it were necessary to "sweeten the pot" by including a class of stable employees such as C. P. R. clerks, Mr. Flintoft continued, then employees of financial institutions should be brought under the Dominion plan.

The departmental stores, Mr. Flintoft said, had suggested the cost of the company contributions would have to be passed on to the selling prices to the consumer; but railways, he said, were "tied down" and could only change rates on approval of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Brighten up with ALL-BRAN!

You've had days when you've felt discouraged and low. Nothing seemed to go right. Frequently these dreary days can be traced to common constipation, due to lack of "bulk" in your meals.

"This ailment may cause headaches and loss of energy. Correct it by eating a delicious cereal.

Laboratory tests show Kellogg's ALL-BRAN provides "bulk" to aid elimination. ALL-BRAN also furnishes vitamin B and food-iron.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN resists digestion better than the fiber in fruits and vegetables. It is gentle—and often more effective. Isn't this natural food better than taking patent medicines—often harmful?

Two tablespoonfuls of ALL-BRAN daily are usually sufficient. With each meal, in chronic cases. If not relieved this way, see your doctor.

Brighten days with ALL-BRAN! Get the red-and-green package at your grocer's. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

Prayer for Jubilee

The following is the Prayer of Thanksgiving to be used throughout the Empire on the occasion of the King's Silver Jubilee:

It is very meet, right, and our bounden duty that we should give thanks unto Thee, O Lord, Holy Father, Almighty, Everlasting God, for that Thou was pleased as on this day to set Thy servant our Sovereign Lord King George upon the Throne of this Realm and hast protected him in days of sickness and of health throughout his reign of five and twenty years.

For the example of unceasing service set by him and by our gracious Queen Mary; for strength and steadfastness, bestowed on him more and more for the love and loyalty borne to him by a great family of peoples and in all parts of the world, by land and sea;and Thy glorious Name.

We then Thee for increase in the knowledge of Thy marvellous works, in care for those who suffer from sickness or the lack of work. In desire that all men everywhere may live in peace and enjoy the fruits of their labor.

Bless and all Thy mercies vouchsafed to us, O Father: Almighty we yield these unfeigned thanks, through Jesus Christ our Lord, to whom with Thee in the Unity of the Holy Spirit be all honor and glory now and for ever. Amen.

FOXBORO RESIDENTS HONORED BY FRIENDS

Foxboro — On Friday evening, March 29, 1935, friends and neighbours gathered in United Church at 8. rooms to do honor to Mr. and Mrs. W. Henderson, prior to their departure to their new home in Prince Edward. During the evening Rev. H. Muston requested Mr. and Mrs. Henderson to come to the platform where the following address was read by Mr. Stilman Gay.

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Henderson:—It is an undisputed fact that time in all phases of life brings its changes and this change which has now taken place in your life is the reason we meet here tonight to express to you our esteem for you, before you leave us for your new home.

In your work among us for the last seventeen years, Mr. Henderson, in your duties as postmaster, and city life in many different phases. In your work as cheese maker, we have always found your product ranking among the highest, and many times even in the specials and your record this last year, in your factory work has been one of your best. It has also been a pleasure to note the neat appearance and cleanliness of the factory, both inside and out and your lawn with its background of flowers. Foster and one whose place will be hard to fill.

Your church life does not take second place, for ever since you came among us you have been closely associated with the work in many of its lines. You have held the offices of trustee, treasurer, Sunday School teacher, assistant superintendent and elder and to these you have given the best service of which your talents enable. These several offices have demanded much of your time and we believe you can look back on your church record, feeling that your labor, given in love, has not been in vain.

We believe you have been just as loyal and faithful in your lodge and society life and while we know some among the loyal friends and brethren where you are going, yet the old friends cannot be forgotten, and we trust the friends you have made here in your fraternal work will always be among the old.

We cannot forget the prominent part you have always taken in our sports and amusements, and how you gave so unstintingly of your time and effort to help along these things among our young men. The men with the horse also will miss you, how much, they will only know when they need the "ring-er" in the contest.

While you, Mrs. Henderson, have not been able, through physical disability to contribute as much as you would have liked, to our community life, we do not want you to think that we have forgotten how you used to help in former years, and how your pleasant smile and bright manner made it a pleasure for us all to meet you.

When we remember all that you Mr. and Mrs. Henderson have meant to our church and community life, we feel that we cannot let you leave us, without publicly expressing our love and appreciation towards you, and we ask you to accept these gifts together with they will always refresh your memories of the pleasant times you have had among us and of the many warm friends you have in Foxboro.

Signed on behalf of your Foxboro friends:

Jno. Gowsell, Jr.
R. J. Clarke
Fred H. Campbell

IN NEW YORK PULPITS

The political and material well-being of the country depends on the church, Rev. Dr. Herbert La Flamme declared in a sermon at the North New York Congregational Church. He quoted from a survey compiled by a business publication that two cents of every dollar goes to the church and to philanthropy, and he said this was not enough for the great work the church was performing. He commended John D. Rockefeller for his gifts for while he might have his faults, he is most generous and there is hardly anyone who is not indebted to him. "If we are in the mindhole today it is because of our way of spending money for other things and withholding it from the church. This leads to impoverishment. We should give with bright hearts and open hands. Every dollar invested in the church waxes not old and the interest we receive reaches into eternity."

Dr. Lewis Browne, author, speaking at the Free Synagogue, New York, declared he felt that the contemporary novelists have turned from the realism of the first two decades of the twentieth century to romanticism as an escape from the realities and troubles of life." Novelists articulate the thoughts of the people. We make our novelists and we tell them what they say. In the last few years the world has crumbled. War greater and more devastating than imagined. People are drawing in on themselves. They are attempting to escape the actualities of life, from its brutality and its horrors. People want the heroic, the magnificent and the glorious—the old nonsense. They are afraid of realism. They want to be taken away from today."

Protestant churches do not make enough of the cross, the Rev. Charles C. Cole of Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, said. "When the Reformers in the housecleaning process of the Reformation, removed the cross from our altars, and the confessional from our services, they threw out the baby with the bath. No better symbol can be found than a wooden cross to mark the resting place of soldiers who fell in France. The dollar mark ought to be placed over the graves of the munition makers who sent these boys to their death—and are planning to do it again."

Asking whether prayer could affect the course of current events in Europe for instance, Rev. Dr. G. A. Buttrick of Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church said that interested prayer is surely of more use than a thousand airplanes and if all people would pray there would be no war. Dr. Butterick denounced the coming naval manoeuvres in the Pacific as a modern parallel of the ancient madness against which Isaiah prophesied.

Rev. W. P. Merrill used the statement of Christ, "Ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars. See, but do not be troubled for the end is not yet," to discredit those pessimists who foresee the end of civilization in an approaching new war. War might mean the end of many things but the end is not yet, he said.

Church unity is not optional but is required for members of the Episcopal Church, said Dean Milo Gates of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

"Jesus never said there was anything wrong with accumulating money," said Rev. Dr. Frank Oliver Hall, at the Universalist Church of the Divine Paternity, "but thrift, economy, providing for the future are virtues that are not inconsistent with Christian teachings. St. Paul never said that money is the root of all evil. He said that the love of money is the root of all sort of evils. The great trouble is in that in the pursuit of wealth men put off the development of the best that is in them.

FASCISM

Italian political prisoners are interned on the island of Ponza, where no adequate medical or surgical service is provided for them. Through the agency of Miss Sylvia Pankhurst and the Manchester Guardian essential instruments were collected and forwarded to Dr. Mario Germani, a famous surgeon whose attempts to assist the wife and child of the murdered socialist, Matteotti, had led to a ten-year sentence on the island. Now Dr. Germani is being prosecuted for practising his profession without belonging to the official fascist corporation of which all Italian physicians and surgeons must be members. Thus the prosecution continues and fascism continues its holy course.—Winnipeg Free Press.

REVIVED INTEREST IN WRITINGS

A sudden burst of interest in the work of Col. John Buchan, who is to be Canada's next Governor-General and occupant of Rideau Hall is reported throughout the province.

It has taken place in other cities and towns and it has been shown in the Belleville Public Library.

When the author is personally known to the reading public it makes a great difference. And assuredly it does when the writer is to be the British Viceroy.

Mr. Buchan's works great as they are needed just the touch of the news to spur reading of his writings to fever heat.

BUSINESS MEN LIKE POETRY—PRIVATELY

What is the place of poetry in the lives of real he-men? According to Louis Untermeyer, distinguished American poet and critic, who is himself a former manufacturer, it occupies a much more important place that most people believe.

"Everyone," he says in the current Rotarian Magazine, "pretends to scorn it —and everyone writes it, acts it, lives it. Say 'poetry' to the average man and he will—publicly, at least—either groan or guffaw. The man-in-the-street considers the proverbial poet almost as much a comic-weekly figure as the caricatured and lampooned mother-in-law."

However, Mr. Untermeyer relates a recent incident which shows that at heart men are different. In addressing a large number of business and professional men in a Pennsylvania city, he had occasion to challenge the audience to deny its instinctive fondness for poetry.

"There isn't a man among you," he said to them, "who hasn't at one time or another, written a poem or a piece of verse, an expression of something that had to be said and which could be uttered in no other form. I'm sure if I were to ransack the desks of every individual here, somewhere I'd find—probably in a bottom drawer, buried beneath cancelled checks or unanswered letters—a rhymed tribute or a tender memory or, at least, an early unpublished valentine."

They agreed. After the lecture, they told Mr. Untermeyer sheepishly, some challengingly, that they had always held poetry in high esteem—privately.

AIR FORCE FLYING: A COMPARISON

Reports from Italy which have just reached London reveal that in 1934 the Royal Italian Air Force flew 185,176 hours, covering more than twenty million miles at an average speed of about 109 miles an hour. Operational conditions affecting the Italian Service and the Royal Air Force are far different, and comparisons are to some extent misleading, but there is legitimate cause for pride in the fact that British warplanes flew more than twice as many hours as the Italian air fleet and covered considerably more than double the distance. For the Italian Service is reputed to be stronger than the British in numbers of aircraft, and might be expected to complete at least as many hours' flying in the year. Evidently, whatever the reasons may be, the average British warplane in service accomplishes far more than twice as much flying in a year as its Italian counterpart.

Statistics given in earlier messages have shown that the aggregate mileage of the Royal Air Force in 1934 was no less than 41,000,000. Over flown areas in the neighborhood of 400,000. Accidents were at their lowest since the war. Yet the British warplanes fly daily on patrol in three continents. They are responsible for the policing of a million square miles of territory, some of it extremely dangerous flying country. Several of the squadrons overseas are on active service during some months every year. Even the squadrons at home fly in weather that is notoriously treacherous. Frequently pessimists would dispute the statement that "visibility" is generally better in the Mediterranean than over the British Isles.

Much of the credit for the magnificent British record must go to the pilots. Their standard of training is high; the deputation of the Royal Air Force system attracts many foreign service pilots every year to England. But even more must be attributed to the dependability of British Aircraft, engines and navigational equipment. Engine failure is nowadays a rare occurrence in the Royal Air Forces.—Society of British Aircraft Constructors.

ECONOMIC PROVINCIALISM

There is a saying in China that the good people are those who live within sound of your cock's crow and your dog's bark. In a word, the good people are the people you know. The people you don't know are very likely bad until they have been proven not to be. The Chinese village is the symbol, round the world, of parochialism. It is a unit that is possibly self-contained and it does not want to be anything else. Socially, we are not likely to approach very close to the Chinese village. We have a different outlook; but economically, we are working toward it.—Vancouver Province.

Ceremony is necessary in courts as the outwark and defence of manners.—Lord Chesterfield.

Think nothing too little; seek for the cross in the daily incidents of life, look for the cross in everything. Nothing is too little which relates to man's salvation, nor is there anything too little in which either to please God or to serve Satan.—Pusey.

The future of society is in the hands of the mothers. If the world was lost through woman she alone can save it.—De Beauford.

PRAYER FOR SIMPLE PEOPLE

Give us the old Eden, Lord!
Let us slip beneath a sword,
Michael's sabre—not more tall
Than an old sword on our wall,

Let the Tree of Life weigh bright
With such apples as we might
Once have gathered, lifted high
By dear arms that since must die;

Be God's rivers clear and brown
As old brooks we wandered down.
Fields of Eden made more sweet
By remembered grass and wheat!

Thought and dream and image made
All this world of form and shade;
Let our dreams our hungers, then
Build that young kind heaven again—

We have gone, Lord, day by day
Your old simple, trusting way;
Duty, courage, gallantry—
At the end, Lord, let there be Such a Heaven for such as we.

—Margaret Widdemer

THAT UNTIDY, DANGEROUS, GAPING HOLE which makes an ugly disfigurement of that fine residential street, Bridge Street East, at the corner of Church Street where formerly the Opera House stood, is a constant eyesore and worry to a number of members of the Sidelight Family, who constantly complain about it. The owners pulled the building to save the taxes—the city gets less taxes and a horrible hole to put a blot upon the claim of Beautiful Belleville. Time something was done about it.

PLAYTIME IN NEW ORLEANS is the annual Mardi Gras celebration in March when the city takes a week's holiday and gaeily rules the roost with beautiful parades in costume, brilliant dances and all kind of entertainments. Col. David Barragar has just returned from New Orleans and the Mardi Gras, and states that the folks down south certainly know how to play and enjoy themselves——a whole week given over to frivolity and abandonment of all work and thought of work. New Orleans is in Louisiana, the land of "The Kingfish", Senator Huey Long, who owns all of Louisiana, politically speaking, except New Orleans, for which a constant battle is being waged between the Long forces and those of Mayor Walmsley, of the ancient Creole City. Senator Long recently threw a force of militia into New Orleans and seized the City Hall, and Mayor Walmsley's city police tried to oust the invaders unsuccessfully. Col. Barragar says that "The Kingfish" is certainly a clever politician, and rules the state with a velvet glove as well as a rod of iron. Followers of the Long faction prosper but opponents have a hard row to hoe, and it is getting so that it is dangerous to voice any disapproval of "The Kingfish" in Louisiana where "walls have ears" and ears have Long recorders.

BROCKVILLE IS SOME SPORTING TOWN, take its hockey and baseball teams and bowling—something big in the sport line all the time. Magedomas, star hockey team of the Island City, fought right up into the finals and but for a weak spell of brief duration against the formidable Sudbury Wolves, would be going yet. This week the Magedomas will visit Atlantic City where they play the famous "Sea Gulls" for the championship of fun and fashion on Thursday and Friday. Brockville sport lovers certainly back their teams to the limit and the presence there of several young men said to be millionaires, who take a great interest in all branches of sport puts an added zest into the games not possible everywhere.

A party of hikers in a remote part of the Brecon Beacons came across a shepherd tending his sheep, and in the course of conversation the shepherd said: "How's the war going on?"

"Good gracious!" cried the hikers, "that was over a long time ago."

"Oh," said the shepherd; "who won?"

"We did."

"Well, what have they done with old Kruger?"

"Why, that was the South African War. We've had another since then."

"Oh, who with this time?"

"With the Germans, and we won that also."

"My word!" said the old man. "I bet Queen Victoria's pleased."

There has been more March than April about this month so far.

The Rev. Dr., S. G. Stone of Bath Bic. Marie died suddenly of heart failure at the home of his son, Mr. H. E. Stone, barrister, Parry Sound, on April 1st. At one time Dr. Stone was pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Tabernacle, in this city. He was superannuated two years ago.

Cheese inspectors and instructors for Eastern Ontario have been appointed and the following are for this county: H. Howie, Belleville, R. W. Ward, Prudence, A. H. Thompson, Madoc, J. B. Lowery, Frankford.

Owing to the fact that at the January session of the Hastings County Council, the report of the committee regarding the establishment of a House of Refuge was rejected and no action taken, something will have to be done in the matter very soon. It is probable that a special meeting of the council will be called in the near future to take some action.

In view of the reported movements of the Fenians the residents of this city purpose forming a home guard and thereby be in a position to give them as any other invaders of their homes a warm reception, to which end a list is being signed at Mr. Corby's office. About fifty have signed already. This number will be very much augmented and drill will commence at once. The upper flat of the room occupied by Mr. Corby will be used as drill room.

A company of home guards is to be formed in connection with Belleville Lodge I. O. O. F.

At a meeting of the Sons of England it was decided to form a home guard and a special meeting of Oxford Lodge has been called for Friday night to organize.

Nearly all the board walks in the city are now free of ice and snow, but the street crossings are still covered and in some places the slush and water is ankle deep.

J. J. BRADDOCK GIVEN CHANCE

Rated as Number One Contender For Heavyweight Crown

NEW YORK, April 3.—(AP)—Perhaps just to strengthen its position, New York State Athletic Commission has reinstated its bellet James J. Braddock as the No. one challenger for the heavyweight championship.

The commission has ordered Jimmy Johnston, Madison Square Garden's matchmaker, to produce signed contracts, on or before April 16, either for an elimination match between Braddock and Max Schmeling, or for a title match between Braddock and Max Baer.

Johnston has not been able to persuade Joe Jacobs to send Schmeling against Braddock. Neither does Johnston believe a Braddock-Baer bout would draw.

The only alternative, apparently, is for the Garden to take a Baer-Schmeling match out of New York State, perhaps to Chicago. Negotiations to that end already are under way.

MRS. B. ROUSE INJURED BY CAR

Alighting From His Steps in Front of Oncoming Motor Car

Stirling—Mrs. Jeremiah Bird visited her daughter, Mrs. Bessie Rouse in Trenton on Sunday. Mrs. Rouse was injured on Saturday when she was struck down by a motor car. She stepped in the path of the oncoming vehicle as she alighted from the bus in front of her home. The driver did everything possible to avoid the accident, but the fact that she turned her back when part way across the road, made it impossible to miss hitting her. Mrs. Rouse suffered a broken hand, and cuts about the face, besides suffering from shock. No blame was attached to the driver of the car.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Whitehead and son Glen, accompanied by friends from Campbellford, motored to Toronto on Friday, returning home on Sunday.

Relief is simple
Just as sleep eases the anxious mind, so does Bisurated Magnesia ease the acid stomach. It neutralizes the excess acids which interfere with normal digestion. Because Bisurated Magnesia is Bismuth in Magnesia, it is more effective than either bismuth or magnesia, used alone, in correcting acid stomach and kindred ailments. Quite harmless—yet certain in bringing relief.

INSTITUTE HOLDS FATHERS' NIGHT

Annual Open Meeting is Splendid Success

Stirling — On Friday evening, March 29, the River Valley Women's Institute combined in one evening their annual open meeting and a special arranged "Fathers' Night, which resulted in one of the finest entertainments held in that community for some time. The president, Mrs. Alex. Bush, called the gathering to order and opened the meeting with the singing of "The Maple Leaf Forever", with a short address of welcome to those present. Mrs. Bush explained the nature of the meeting. Fathers were in charge of the entire program, and after the business part of the meeting, and the various secretarial reports were read and adopted, the president called on Mr. Walter Lindenfield to act as chairman for the remainder of the evening. In his short address he spoke of the splendid work done by the Institute organization throughout the district. The yearly reports which are just here read by the secretary, proved that activities reached out far beyond their own community, and were of great benefit to the country at large. Many of these organizations through their many branches had been of great benefit to the nation, and to further their aims by giving co-operation in all their efforts in the spirit of every patriotic Canadian.

The programme opened with community singing, led by Mr. Walter Lindenfield. Mr. Arthur Jamieson of Stirling told a few Scotch stories, and sang "When Irish Eyes are Smiling", and as an encore offered an amusing parody on "Mother Machree". Mr. Jamieson gave a reading in his usual fine manner, "The Burial of St. Patrick", and finished by telling a humorous story. Miss Fanny Keating and Mr. Farley Lindenfield then offered two very pleasing duets, "The Easter Parade" and "When My Ship Comes In", accompanied at the piano by Miss Mae Curry. This was followed by a debate, "Resolved that married life is more pleasing than that of a bachelor". The affirmative side was very ably defended by Mr. Percy Ulman and Mr. Alex. Bush, whose defensive arguments were so forcibly given that the audience was almost convinced at the very outset. But the two quick thinking gentlemen on the negative side, Mr. George Heasman and Mr. Ross Bush, came forward with points of equally convincing character, giving the judges a problem that was far beyond them. No verdict was rendered, but both teams created a great deal of fun and merriment with their humorous sayings.

After the debate the four gentlemen took part in a quartette, "I wish I was single again", accompanied by Mrs. Percy Ulman at the piano. Mr. Robert Hedley then contributed two splendid tenor solos, accompanied by Mrs. Heasman. Two readings given by Mrs. C. Chard were very much appreciated, "Cuddle Doon", and Edgar Guest's "Women's gift from Heaven". After two more comic selections by Art. Duncan, "A Mixed Medley" and "My Ingersoll", Mr. Alex. Bush gave an original reading. Mr. Walter Linderfield sang two solos, and the very fine program was brought to a close with community singing and the National Anthem.

Lunch was served by the ladies, and everyone felt that it was a very enjoyable evening, and that the fathers proved themselves capable of putting on a really fine programme.

Miss Gladys Rosebush played the accompaniment for Mr. Duncan and also for the community singing.

TRANSPORTATION SUBJECT OF TALK

Kiwanis Club Hears of Problems of Automotive Association

In line with objective to carry on work among the boys of this city, the Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon on Tuesday last accepted the project of the club sponsoring junior ball in this city and it is more than likely, that junior team wearing the crest of the Kiwanis Club will enter the Provincial playdowns. The club also voted a donation to the score card, wishing the Belleville Amateur Baseball Association plenty of success in the coming campaign. Cliff Barrager presided at the luncheon with Albert Boyington as sergeant at arms and Gordon Bray as song leader. The principal address was delivered by L. G. Fabian, general manager of the Automotive Transport Association.

Cameron Hardy, manager of Thor Frigidaire was admitted as a new member being introduced by Eddie Addis. Guests of the newest Rotarian ship committee and initiated by the president. "Can" is a prominent merchant in the city, and was born at Actinolite and in this city for some years. He is a welcome addition to the club and the ranks of the fishermen has been increased by one. Frank Folwell gave a three minute talk on the "Value of Athletics" stating that athletics provides one with fine physical development and wards off many ailments. He congratulated the club on their interest in junior ball and also pleaded that more interest be taken in Track and Field athletics. He spoke against importation of players, believing they should be developed and also boosted the efforts of the local rugby club as a fall pastime.

The speaker was introduced by the president and after thanking the club for the privilege of addressing them, Mr. Fabian stated, that the present investigation now completed concerning transport problems would bring forth better legislation. He dealt with the booting problem of hauling and believed the Provincial Commercial Vehicle Act, was doing a lot of good to overcome this evil. Bootlegging of loads between Ontario and Quebec was also dealt with and stated that soon a reciprocal arrangement would be made between the two provinces. Mr. Fabian was convinced that legislation trucking and railways each had its own field for operation and there was room for both. He elaborated in the safety campaign carried out by his association believing a great number of the accidents were caused by carelessness. The address was instructive and Dr. G. S. Cronk moved a hearty vote of thanks.

Candid Camera Reveals "Conditioned" Babe Proves Smarter Than "Normal" Twin

In this first of a series of two layouts, unposed candid camera snapshots show progress in second phase of unique experiment in child psychology at Columbia University Medical Center, New York, with Florrie and Margie, 16-month-old girl twins, as subjects. Florrie has had special training since birth, whereas Margie has grown "natural". Florrie now displays higher degree of intelligence than her sister. Follow the pictures with us left to right. Florrie stands erect and scoots down a slide unafraid; a piece of candy placed on a stand is no difficulty for her—she brings down to get it; and she climbs, ew on top of it without difficulty. She could skate as early as she could walk. But Margie shown in the four other panels, won't risk the slide, can't get a candy, is fearful about being atop the stand, and won't walk unless aided. To-morrow, the development of two boys, now 3 years old will be portrayed.

Photos by Samuel Shere.—Copyright by Central Press Canadian.

About These Extraordinary Pictures:

By Central Press Canadian

New York, April 3—Margie and Florrie, 16-month-old twin girls, are showing the same reactions to natural and scientific training as did their predecessors, Jimmy and Johnnie, in the Normal Child Development Clinic at Columbia University Presbyterian Medical Centre. Science, evidently plays no favorites with the sexes.

A remarkable series of photographs was obtained by Central Press Canadian candid cameraman, Samuel Shere, showing the difference in the development of the two little girls, and the two boys. Pictures of the girls are reproduced today. Another layout showing the two boys will appear to-morrow.

Margie and Jimmy, who have been permitted to grow "like Topsy" were frequently found kneeling backwardness and lack of understanding.

On the other hand, Florrie and Johnnie, whose training constantly has been under the direction of psychologists, philosophers and anatomists, are aggressive and display a keen knowledge of how to get what they want.

Few seems to be unanimous in the minds of the scientifically trained babies. For instance, Johnnie thought it fun to climb to the high top of a pile of boxes and leap into the outstretched arms of an instructor. So did Florrie. They also slid down a slide at an angle of about 45 degrees in great glee.

But Jimmy and Margie, who, with her sister, has been in the clinic only a short time, plainly showed fear of height; also of the sharp incline.

Todd, B.A., will be interested to learn that he was extended a call by the congregation of Calvary United Church, Kingston. Mr. Todd, a graduate of Albert College, and Queen's Theological College, has been a student supply at Calvary Church for the past year, following the retirement of Rev. R. Calvert.

The Mountain Echo of Brattleboro, Vermont, in its reference to the parish of St. Michael's Episcopal Church of that place, of which Rev. L. Sylvester is rector, states that Mr. Frank Burton was elected as church warden. Mr. Burton is a Belleville boy and a son of Mr. Benjamin Burton, formerly of Belleville, now resident of Huntingdon Park, California.

Under the auspices of the Conservative Women's Ward, a successful euchre party was held last (Monday) evening in the Conservative Association rooms. Forty tables were in play and the competition for the valuable prizes offered was keen. The successful competitors were as follows: Ladies' 1st, Mrs. B. Leeman; 2nd, Mrs. V. Weaver; 3rd, Mrs. L. Clarke. Gents' 1st, J. Johnson; 2nd, C. Moreau; 3rd, R. H. Boyle. Mrs. McKenzie proved to be the winner of the door prize. At the conclusion of cards, a dainty lunch was served by the ladies of the ward. Mr. C. A. Payne, K.C., was called upon and gave a brief but interesting address. Mr. Fred Smith, chairman of the ward committee and others assisting him did all in their power for the comfort and pleasure of their guests and their efforts were awarded by a substantial surplus after expenses had been provided for.

There were labor elements opposed to the compulsory features of the scheme who also considered the rate of contribution of employees should be lower than the 25 cents weekly rate, he added.

Qualifying Period Long

Mr. Moore said there was a feeling in labor the qualifying period of 40 weeks was too long and there were a large number of workers who would not come under the measure.

The measure had been drawn up on an actuarial basis and apparently any amendments might alter the set-up, but he had great fear except the plan for the time being to see how it worked.

If any consideration were to be given to scaling the employee's assessments even further than that on the proposed "flat rate," the labor head asked re-casting of the benefits be made from the proposed "flat rate."

Guardians of the Desert

By TOM GILL

Only at the dam there was no interruption of activities. Sari had seen to that. But here, too, even as they worked, men talked excitedly of the futility of their labor. To the ranchers who had ridden out to the dam Sari issued a flat denial of all Lowell's charges, branding every word as a lie, a plot to disorganize his work and inflame the countryside to hostility. He would be at the meeting that night, prepared to refute every lie his enemies had brought against him. It was unbelievable, Lowell must be mad—thus Nicholas Sari voiced emphatic but still unruffled denial.

Throughout that day the atmosphere was filled with steadily preparations, as if all the border were girding for approaching combat. At noon a messenger from the Governor arrived by plane and was hurried out to the dam where for two hours he and Sari remained closeted. Meanwhile, wires from Sari's headquarters flashed west to San Francisco and east to Washington—long code messages that came and went. Only once that day did Sari unleash the fury of Verde, and then briefly and well guarded. Twice while roaming there had been clashes between the ranchers and Sari's fanition and only through Dick's cool counsel was a number of the rattlemen prevented from riding to Asure Land to deal out summary justice in Sari's camp.

Long before evening men began crowding into Verde over the sod-den, rain soaked roads, and in the mind of each rose over the ominous question, "How will it end?" The abaldened windows of the newspaper office, the tale of Nora's abduction were tantalizing enough of what they might expect from the followers of Sari, and by nightfall the news that a meeting had been found murdered near the dam brought new tension to the anxious town. Steadily the realization grew that this meeting would be the crisis of a long, bitter fight, and much must be decided there by force of arms.

And twice that day, perhaps for this very reason, trains from the Oaks carried to Verde the largest uncommunicative men into Verde who were driven immediately out to the dam. Neither Dick nor Barnes needed anyone to tell them that these men, too, would be at the meeting to support Sari in any emergency.

Toward misafternoon an orderly from the post brought Dick a message from Sari, and, entering Barnes' car, he drove through wind and rain to the captain's quarters. As he entered, Lowell saw Nora standing by the desk, and in spite of himself a spark of anger and resentment flared within him and added his glare to the hostility toward the man.

O'Hearn rose, his carefully pressed uniform, polished boots and bright spurs in marked contrast with Dick's soiled and rained upon clothes. Without delay the captain came to the point.

"I've asked you here on some-thing rather important, Lowell." He turned as the girl picked up her gloves. "Nora, please don't go. It may be better if all of us hear and stay."

Dick threw his hat on the desk. "I'm sorry to be the cause of Nora's leave taking, but if she then instantly regretted the coldness of the tone.

But Nora only smiled. "Dick, whenever you speak like that I al-ways know you're thinking." Weary from his long night's vigil and the suspense of those passing hours, Dick threw himself into a chair.

"Trouble is brewing right here in Verde—plenty trouble—and quickly.

"That's pretty well known to you here," O'Hearn replied. "This meeting you and Barnes are calling tonight is bound to aggravate the enmity that already exists between the ranchers and Nicholas Sari. You have taken the leader-ship in all this, and it's not good what possible good, can such a meeting accomplish?"

Steadily Dick looked at him, "It can accomplish one thing. It can smile the mess we're in a bit and resolve to resist the power of Sari to the limit."

CHAPTER TWENTY-NINE

O'Hearn shook his head. "I'm afraid of that meeting. It may result in bloodshed."

"It may."

Both sides are armed. The ranchers are bitter. There have been shots exchanged today. I should not like to feel responsible for what-ever happens in the hall tonight."

Quietly Dick answered, "Whatever happens is not your responsibility. It will be mine and Sari's."

"Are you willing to share in that responsibility?"

"I am ready to take responsibility for whatever I or the men who are with me may do. If Sari and his hired killers want war, we will have to meet them on those grounds. Fair back down now would mean the death of every hope. It would be accepting the situation that Sari has forced upon us."

"There are the courts."

As if the very word stung him, Dick jumped from his chair. "The courts! Why don't you say 'Sari's courts'. In this state, my friend, they lie under the control of Nicholas Sari."

With sombre eyes he looked at Nora. "Are you here to persuade me not to hold this meeting?"

She smiled at the veiled anger in his tone. "Dear! Haven't you enough enough that you would like to include your old playmate? When did I ever try to prevent you from doing anything? No, but I want Pat to know exactly where you stand about Nick Sari. Don't you see, Dick that with your past reputation for ruthless it's easy to believe that you're come out to Verde seeking trouble? I don't want him to believe that. I want him to know the truth. Isn't that a good reason for being here?"

But the strain of the past hours and his growing hostility to O'Hearn were wearing Lowell's patience thin.

"Must I account to everyone for what I do?" he demanded hotly. "This military has no place in this. What goes on tonight lies between Nick Sari's men and the ranchers of Verde."

"The desert ranchers—the men who made this country—the men whose home it is," O'Hearn said going to keep it in spite of Nick Sari, the military and all Hell."

Thrusting on his hat, Lowell turned and ran down the steps to his car. As he took the wheel he heard light feet hurrying close behind, and even before he started the en-gine Nora jumped into the seat be-side him.

She laughed softly as he skidded the car around the parade ground and its long nose headed for the road toward Verde.

"Of all the ardent firebrands! Is not it wiser to be a little more careful?"

He tried not to meet her smiling gaze tried not to see the rain sparkling on her hair, but with gaze fixed on the misty road ahead, "Nora, would you have me do? Give up my ideals of the past and let Sari have his own way?"

Angry and a little hurt she blazed back at him, "I'm not asking that. But there's nothing to be gained by antagonizing Sari. Is that clear to him? that he should have your point of the question as well as Sari's."

"If O'Hearn hasn't heard the ranchers' side of the story, he's been missing superb opportunities," Dick replied with some heat.

"Isn't my meaning clear enough? You ride with him nearly every day of your life."

She was silent, glad in her heart that he was angry enough to be quick-ly able to hurt him. "Well, of course he's been kind to me in many things at the time," she answered, and her eyes rose mockingly to his stern, set face.

Suddenly she asked, "What time is the meeting?"

"Eight."

She glanced at her watch. "Not quite two hours more. They drew up before the newspaper office, and as he turned the car over to her Lowell felt the girl's hand clutch his sleeve.

"Dick," she pleaded and now all trace of anger and resentment had departed from her voice, "You're over-wrought and troubled and it's terribly important that what happens tonight be done wisely. Promise me you won't. Promise me you won't lose your head. Say that you won't let Sari goad you into doing anything that may bring disaster at the very moment of your victory. You must be cool. You must be calm. For the sake of the cause and for your own self. Promise me."

Turning, he looked down her eyes. He forced himself to smile. "I promise."

For a fleeting second the little hand lingered on his sleeve, then she was gone.

It had grown dark since they left the cavalry post, and the rain which he had not eaten since early morning, as walking past the newspaper office he turned up a side street where Verde's only restaurant had its redolent existence. As he rounded the corner the north wind buffeted him with increased vio-lence driven beneath a sky that grew ever blacker with low, scudding clouds.

But inside the restaurant a stove roared and after a half hearted

Our King and Queen on their Silver Jubilee

"Honni Soit Qui Mal Y Pense"

RETURNED at last to England early in January, 1912, King George and Queen Mary were able to settle down to serious business of being King and Queen.

And such a business is no easy task.

State functions, formal occasions alone, numerous appointments every day, official visits and tours—all these fell only a fraction of the duties of a King and Queen.

There are documents of state that must be studied and signed—and King George was never one to sign without reading. After making a thorough study of the situation, Constitutionally, of course, the King is bound to rely on the advice of his ministers, but during the 25 years of King George's reign, it has many times been the case that when statesmen took the advice of the King.

One recent notable case is told, of when the Labor government under Ramsay MacDonald was tottering. It is declared that the King sent for the minister and proposed to him that he should head a new National government. Sorely, MacDonald acceded to His Majesty's wishes and the National government was swept into power.

Right from the start, the reign of King George was predestined for trouble and strife. In 1914 there were disturbances in Ireland and the threatening cloud by the House of Lords of the home rule bill; in the same year there was the Balkan War and later with Turkey. This followed in 1917 by the disastrous attack on Serbia by Bulgaria. Then the overrunners to the threat of civil war in Ireland and eventually the world war.

Our picture to-day shows the King and Queen in a historic ceremony attending the procession of the Knights of the Garter at Windsor Castle. The Order of the Garter and its motto—"Honi soit qui mal y pense"—is famed the world over.

been seen in the Verde country. Sallow, furtive and thin lipped, cadaverlled, the over their eyes, they were men of a type easily placed. Dick watched them sign themselves behind Sari's desk, recognizing the pockmarked face of the man called Bear, he smiled at the knowledge that at last Sari was calling upon his secret henchmen. Well, if force was to be the final arbiter of the meeting that night, the issue would be clear-cut—the struggle would be between the Western rancher and the dregs of the cities.

But at the entrance of those three gunfighters in the atmosphere in that crowded room became electric. Even the coolest heads among the men of Verde realized that any hope for a peaceful outcome was fast vanishing, and more than one rancher flung back his cost with an attempt to conceal the gun that hung at his belt. Grimly they stood ready.

And now all eyes were turned toward Lowell. For a time he looked at Sari, then in the clear voice that carried easily to the far corners of the room he began.

"One year ago Nicholas Sari, who sits before you there, announced his plan for bringing water to our desert ranches. You believed him. He told you of surveys that had been made, showing how a ditch could be brought around the north end of the Barrier. He called on many of you to pledge your land and buy stock in the company. You mortgaged your cattle. You deeded to him lands in return for promises of water rights. Most of that land Sari now owns. He has divided it and sold it at many times the price he paid you. But always he has told you that this ditch that is coming and of the wealth that is to follow. Partly because of your faith in him, partly because you have believed this, for my father was one of the men who fought Senator Nick Sari of tricking both you and my father. I say wrong! I tell you that the ditch is not and never was a possibility. The dam at Asure Lake has no power. Nick Sari has said, to increase the flow of water during the dry months, has to irrigate the land he owns on the other side of the Barrier. Sari knows this, and so do I. He has for ever sold one foot of that land? Try to buy it. There are those who belong to him, and they alone will benefit by the water carried with your money. Every word that I am saying to you I stand ready to prove, and Nicholas Sari knows that his disprove it."

A hard look sat down Sari rose, his eyes passing an amused expression over the faces of the ranchers, then rested in cold hostility on Lowell.

His voice was untroubled. "When this meeting was called I half suspected that there was a conspiration into— an attack by the disgruntled members of this community and a branch of lies from the disloyal part of a man we all revere. But before I had left the ranch house today let me read you a telegram from Solon Cadle, the Order of the Garter in Washington, and this lying upstart who dares to denounce his own father and me as thieves and despoilers."

From his pocket Sari took a crumpled telegram, "At tonight's meeting of Verde men meet Lowell," read, "I repeat my entire confidence in the integrity and wisdom of Nicholas Sari and I have returned for all time the actions of my disgruntled and misguided son Thomas Lowell, Signed, Solon Lowell."

A moment Sari looked down the paper and thrust it back into his pocket. His long, slender finger pointed directly at Lowell. "Lowell has told you the survey is false, that the dam at Asure Lake has always been a liar, and a jealous one. With the aid of that over-ambitious editor of the Intelligencer he has made some of you believe him. He has said that I am afraid of what he has said, but I shall spend neither time nor money in refuting his charges. If any of you want that, you can do it yourselves. As to the land I hold beyond the Barrier, I am free to control my rights to the ditch, and that shall continue to control it."

Dick jumped to his feet. "How long will you control it?"

"A narrow strip on either side of the ditch."

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't take a dose of salts that only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. Your trouble may be that you're not getting enough bile juice into your intestines to help digest your food. It should pour out into your intestines every day and if it's clogged up and you don't get rid of it, you get constipated.

If this bile doesn't flow freely, your food just doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get sick, your head aches, bad taste and your breath is foul; skin often breaks out in blemishes. You feel sour, sunk and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get them two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, but harmless ingredients that act directly on the liver. Ask for CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS by name. Don't accept substitutes. Look for the signature of Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Insist: a substitute. Must not be cheap. 25c. at all druggists.

Maroon Defence to Look After Primeau, Jackson, Conacher Says Tommy Gorman, Manager

Montreal Team Arrives in Toronto For The First Game

OUT FOR GOALS

(By Elmer Dulmage)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

TORONTO, April 3.— (CP) Tommy Gorman, who hasn't made any Stanley Cup mistakes in the last twelve months, has called the turn for at least the first round of hockey's biggest series here Thursday night—mental freedom for Toronto's "kid line". That's the only freedom he intends they should have.

The former Ottawa newspaperman racing executive and hockey coach, who took the Stanley Cup to Chicago a year ago and took it away with him a week ago, brings his Montreal Maroons here tomorrow with absolutely no designs on Charlie Conacher and Harvey Jackson, other than to leave them to the defence.

His announcement, that the twin bombers of the Leafs would receive no more attention than any other Toronto Wingers encouraged hopes of fandom here, that the series would not develop into a mid-ice checking deal. The word is out that the speedy Maroons are coming to town for goals.

The result may be that Gorman's two high-scoring forward lines—Herbie Cain, Dus Mosker and Bob Gracie on the one hand, and Earl Robinson, Russ Blinco and Pete Trottier on the other—will try to beat down Toronto's secondary forward divisions, while the Leafs attack directly with one line, Conacher, Jackson and Primeau.

Statistically speaking, Maroons can send out two prolific scoring lines to Toronto's one. Unlike Boston Bruins, who had only Eddie Shore and Babe Siebert for the heavy defensive end, Maroons have four first-rate rearguards, from end to end they rate higher than the Bruins—who were tough enough for the Leafs in the National League finals.

Statistics

Here is an end-to-ent statistical rush, covering both league and play-off games and avoiding individuals as such:

| Teams | W. | L. | T. | P. | A |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Maroons . . . | 26 | 19 | 5 | 129 | 96 |
| Leafs . . . . | 33 | 15 | 5 | 164 | 112 |

| Goal G. All-wed Average Shutouts: | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Maroons | 26 | 1.83 | 11 |
| Leafs | 113 | 2.17 | 10 |
| Defence | G. | A. | G. A. Pens. in Mins |
| Maroons | 16 | 20 | 96 185 |
| Leafs | 21 | 45 | 113 206 |
| Forwards | G. | A. | Pts. Pens. in Mins. |
| Maroons | 113 | 69 | 182 219 |
| Leafs | 143 | 76 | 219 214 |

Regardless of the figures, few critics concede, that Alex Connell will provide the Maroons with any better goal-tending than George Hainsworth will supply the Leafs. And, too, regardless of the figures, the Leafs have protected Hainsworth in the playoffs quite as capably as the Maroons have protected Connell.

Toronto's defence has a better scoring record than the Montreal quartet, but they compiled it during the regular season, when the Leafs did little else but attack. Since the playoffs started H. Day, Bill Hoilett, Red Horner and King Clancy have been paying strict attention to work around their own net.

Montreal's rear division men, Lionel Conacher, Allan Shields, Marvin Wentworth and Stew Evans, may break on a rush to relieve pressure but otherwise they are expected to sit tight. If this is to be a series where the rival forwards will shoot it out, the defences will likely work within a small area.

KERR SAVES SENSATIONALLY THOUGH RANGERS BEATEN

Though they fought themselves into a 3-3 tie on Montreal ice in the second game of their two-game series, New York's blue-clad Rangers were unable to overcome the one-goal lead , powerful Maroons had gained on New York ice and went down five goals to four on the round. The series moves to finalist for Stanley Cup honors, and Maroons now go on against Toronto Maple Leafs, who bested Boston for the N.H.L. championship. Desperate in their efforts to score, the Rangers threw three, four and five man rushes up the ice, leaving goalie Dave Kerr to protect the nets alone. Here he is dropping to the ice as he staves off a maroon-clad player bearing goalward. His style of play brings him far out of the net when opposing attackers are coming in.

Claim Listaro Best Choice To Corner King's Guineas

LISTARO

By CHARLES "HORSES" AYRES
Central Press Canadian Writer

Toronto, April 3—Entries for the 76th renewal of the King's Plate oldest continuously run stake on the North American continent, released by Palmer Wright, secretary of the Ontario Jockey Club, show that 41 of the best Canadian-bred thoroughbreds in many years have been nominated by different owners throughout the province.

The King's Plate, which will be run at Woodbine Park, opening day Saturday, May 18, carries the highest purse value of any stake on any track in Canada. The purse not only carries the high value of $5,000 added, but also a gift of 50 guineas donated by his majesty's the King.

Not since the race was first run in 1860, when Mr. Jas. White's Don Juan came romping home the winner at Carlton (now West Toronto) have so many outstanding Canadian-bred thoroughbreds been nominated as have been named for this year's running.

The nominations include Listaro, who will run coupled with Calico Miss and Eileen D., owned by Mr. R. S. McLaughlin of Oshawa. Out unbeaten in all her starts, which included the Clarendon Plate, as a two-year-old and who went into winter quarters last fall with the racing fans saying: "Beat Listaro and you win the Plate."

Then there's Lipton, who will flaunt the colors of Ryland H. New, winner last year of the Coronation Stakes at Woodbine Park and Long Branch Special at Long Branch. Much interest was robbed of these two events owing to the absence of Listaro through a training injury which necessitated him declining two stakes, They'll meet in the Plate. Lipton will also have running mates, being coupled with Fly Miss and Hilltoin for the same owner.

Mr. E. F. Seagram, popular Waterloo sportsman, has nominated his three-year-old filly, Jungle Rock, Langstaff, County Court and Sally Pullen. The best of the Seagram string being Gay Sympathy, Jungle Rock still a maiden ran some very creditable races during his first year under colors.

Others nominated and their owners are: Beech Stable, Crystal Beach; T. S. Cochenour, Papalico; R. H. Cowell, Parma Violet; R. W. Cowie, Discount; S. B. Crawford, Goggles; G. H. Ellis, Bandman; J. C. Fair, Rural Shower and Big Bud; Alexander Fraser, Dimark and Big Bud; C. P. Furry, March Hare; Bob Graham, Beechview; George Hardy, Oltation and Gallibel; M. E. Hardy, Prince Hero; Hastings Stables, Sweet Edwin; H. C. Hatch, Chippewa and Wanatick; G. A. Northgraves, Whilchrig; P. E. Pedlar, Easterosm; Mrs. Charles Robson, Vingt Cinq and Sally Pullen; W. Russell, Lineaman; J. E. Smallman, Rightford and Andante; South View Stable, Natal; W. H. Wright, Worthing Tax Free, Boom Days and Sperged.

One has only to glance over the list above and he can readily see that the 1935 running of the King's Plate will be one of the most contested stakes seen in the classic in many years. See if we're not right.

It was announced yesterday, that the Annual Cup semi-finals would be played at Toronto on Saturday night; with the Halifax Wolverines meeting the winner of the Montreal-champions. At any rate this league will be officially represented at the provincial convention by Ernie Gibbard, while the rest of the Central Ontario district will have R. A. Ellis of Belleville, past president of the O.B.A.A. and Bill Kay of Peterboro as their official spokesmen. It is understood that Mr. Ellis will be asked to present Jim Barclay's case for the paroled baseball body meets on April 5th at Kingston.

At the regular meeting of the local Kiwanis Club held yesterday their organization of enterprising service clubmen voted to sponsor and foster junior baseball in Belleville in its entirety. One of the final proposals to confront the Kiwanis was a suitable playing grounds for the tutoring or education of junior baseballers where they can be assured of nightly practice. The Kiwanis Club have only scratched the surface in regard to their final plans are concerned in the matter, but expect considerable assistance from the citizens as a whole. In all probability the old circus or Alemite grounds at the city of Fine Street will be groomed where the junior league can hold forth each early and May fine. It was suggested, that at least three teams be organized with an all-star team being picked along about June 10th and sent into the O.B.A.A. playdowns under the auspices of the Belleville Kiwanis Club. More information in relationship to junior baseball in Belleville will be published from time to time in order to keep the term age boys posted as to when meetings and practices are to be held.

HODGE PODGE—Promoter Clem Allen says his list of entries for the Golden Gloves boxing tournament closed with 23 entries, in all. The bouts can all be concluded in one big night of wallopping at the Armouries next Tuesday, when eliminations and finals will be all set off in jig time. Naturally with over fifteen bouts on the cards the fans can be certain early and late as the show will last well over the three hour limit. When the "city limits" met on Monday night they rescinded their previous motion to the effect the old curling rink to the Stewart-Warner-Alemite A.C. for a boxing and wrestling club. It is understood that the building in question will be remodelled and the entertainment is running fever-high and doubtless there will be a thrill contest in the coming city basketball championship play-downs that open at the Collegiate gymnasium Thursday evening when Ralph Morgan's "Y" team tangles with Geo. Laughlin's senior B.C.T. hoopsters and the Deacon A. C. kids meet the B.C.I. junior interscholastic cagers in a double bill. . . . . The ultimate victors of this series will meet next week for the basketball championship of Belleville.

New York, April 3. —(AP)— A seven-game winning streak for New York Yankees and Chicago White Sox' improved showing against Pittsburgh Pirates, have enabled the American League to take a wide edge over the National in the race for the mythical "Grapefruit League" Baseball Championship.

Of the 68 games so far played the American League has won 39; The National 26, Fifty-nine games remain to be played but the American league's 10-game edge is not likely to be overcome.

The Yankees, showing up at the expense of Boston Braves, are carrying most of the American League hopes. They've won nine of their 13 games with National League opponents.

Daily Short Story

"The Signature"

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

THE SIGNATURE

Perhaps you've seen them advertised in the paper; the bank accounts without any claimers. What with all the poverty around, it may seem strange that people can deposit thousands of dollars and forget about it. They do, and it is an eternal headache for the banks. They can't touch it until after a certain number of years, and then it is taken by the State.

Most of the money deposited by criminals under assumed names and when they depart suddenly from this earth. No one knows about their ill-wealth. All over the country, people without relatives, misers and dummy corporations pour hundreds of thousands into accounts that languish for years. If the truth could be got from these frozen fortunes, tales could be written, that would excite the imagination of a Jules Verne.

The Interstate Commercial Bank was preparing its yearly statement for the papers. The list containing the depositors' names, has people with every conceivable nationality. Every angle was run down, immigration lists, deaths and prison records were checked thoroughly. The biggest item was for $126,000, deposited by one Theodore La Grosse. Mr. La Grosse appeared nowhere in any record. The police were consulted.

Lieutenant Vickers, in charge of forgeries, looked at the deposit book signature and gave his opinion. "It could only be Jerry Skorsky, but you might as well give up because you'll never prove it." Vickers should know, for he followed Skorsky's career. He was he who dubbed Jerry "Alias Whoever He Pleases."

CONFIDENCE MAN

Jerry Skorsky was one of the army of confidence men that drifted to this country from Europe after the war. Pickings were not so good on the continent and rush days were tops here. Jerry was what might be described as a handsome fifty-per, a mixture of many races. His special field was gambling, but because it involved too much effort and no end of ingenuity to keep clear of people he trimmed, he turned his talents to forgery.

While duplicating someone's writing for your own personal benefit was by no means a new art, Jerry developed it to a foolproof profession. His agile fingers were able to duplicate a signature perfectly. Most of the artists make the sad mistake of using the same type of writing more than once. This is where Skorsky shined. He never signed or used the same name twice. As a result even he doubted that he could write his own name as it should be and also smooze the police go end. They never could tack anything on him.

For years Jerry lived in clover. Part of his success was due to the fact that he never let himself. For weeks he would work dilligently and then lay off the results living in great luxury, miles away from the crime. But the excesses and old age crept on him and he planned the last coup. This was going to be the master of them all and then he would retire. To execute this plot would require a violation of his greatest wish; he would have to work, actual work. In order to carry out his scheme.

The Utility Bond Corporation needed smart men for their confidential work. Jerry Skorsky was a smart man and a smart man always gets wind of a new opportunity. So shortly thereafter Skorsky wangled his way into the firm and Pinch (Old Man) Bottomly, who never went wrong on a deal, found a very capable, and very obliging man working in his office.

Skorsky became a very industrious worker and began handling accounts, buying and selling stocks. The constant signing of drafts and the thousands of dollars used for immediate cash was below his contempt. With such opportunities a few thousands was not worth trifling with. Gross receits were of more interest to the Master.

CHECK RAISING

A plain out and out check raising would have been too crude for the genius of Skorsky. He was laying his plans, which were simple in themselves, but required time and fitness. Because of his foreign experience, the job of dealing in European securities was given to Skorsky. The Continental market required adeptness because currency fluctuates daily and the acceleration of a few cents, when trading thousands of shares might ruin chances for profits. His shrewdness was quickly discerned by Bottomly and his confidence grew to the extent where Skorsky handled all of the foreign accounts.

Through a source in the Parisian Commercial Bank, Skorsky learned that although the bank appeared sound, inner workings were going to crash it in a short while. The shock, he knew, would also do something to the franc and while it would only be a temporary set back, it would allow him time to clean up. "Utility Bonding" was buying heavily of stocks through the "Parisian." Skorsky plugged it with Bottomly. He bought heavily.

The stocks crept slowly up. A week later when the franc was up Jerry took the shares and sold them. The next morning he blithely made out the selling order for that day, easily duplicating the signature of the clerk who signed the original order. It is a matter of public record that the "Parisian Commercial" split wire open and while the stocks suffered little, the franc wobbled violently and took months to recover. Skorsky pocketed $120,000, and hotfoolly congratulated him for selling the stocks when he did.

The loot went into a safety deposit vault, and Skorsky made plans for retiring. He knew that he would have to, for the monthly checkup of the duplicate selling orders might cause no little investigation even though the forgery was faultless. The checkup came a few days ahead of schedule. The American branch was enabled to clear up its foreign troubles. Skorsky hurriedly deposited the $120,000 along with $6,000 of his own, so that the bank would not get overly suspicious of the corresponding amount when word got around.

Europe saw him for a few months and then he decided to come back and draw the account by degrees. The account was in the name of Theodore La Grosse, a common enough name that had the ring of wealth to it. The necessary papers were got from the bank. Skorsky, it must be remembered never duplicated a signature. And that night in his hotel room, horror gripped him. The name he, precise it is for Skorsky racked his brain and could not remember the style of the signature that was the key to the fortune.

Little Benny's Note Book

After supper ma was listening to her wrist watch not going, and I said, May ma, do you know anybody with a name anything like Sqlurgis?

No, I never heard of such a name, ma said, I do know a Mrs. Skurgis, she said, and I said, Well, that's like Sqlurgis, alot it? Do you think if I had of asked you if you knew anybody with a name anything like Skergis, do you think that would of reminded you of her too? I said.

Now never mind any roundabout remarkable, if you have anything to tell me, tell me, ma said, and I said, she never saw me before and she knew who I was rite away, she said I look exackly like you.

Who, Mrs. Skergis? ma said, and I said Sure, aint you flattered ma?

You're the one that ast to be flattered by all the rules of politeness for land sakes, such a question ma said. Well, always knew there was a strong resemblence, but the idea of anyone stepping you out of a blue sky on the street to ask if I was your mother, thats really remarkable, ma said, and I said, She didn't ask if you was my mother, she said she would tell I was your child, and it wasn't out on the street, me, it was rite here, I mean at the front door, I mean she rang the doorbell and I snatched it, but you wasn't home.

Well of all the complicated ways to arrive at a simple statement, ma said. What time did she call? she said, and I said, about 4 and she said if you got home before 7 for you to call her up.

Well my goodness I did, didn't I? ma said, and I said, Mam? Did what? and ma said, I bet anything she had tickets for something or other, she's a grate one for having tickits given to her. Or course I asked someone eits by this time, but I'm going to call her up just for curiosity, and if it was tickits you'll hear from me, ma said.

And she went to the telefone and I cuick snuck up to my room on account of it being tickits all rite, ony I had forgot to mention them.

It was several days [illegible] her friends reached India's capital city. En route, fulfilling one of Pat's cherished dreams, the party motored to Agra to see the world's most exquisite building, the famous Taj Mahal.

Outside the city's walls, she first saw the faultless mausoleum, like an opal tinted cloud upon the horizon. Later, when the full moon illuminated its alabaster beauty, Pat stole away to the scented gardens.

Beside the silver pool, Roger Cecil found her. Spellbound, Pat thought of the undying devotion which caused Shah Jehan to build this tomb for his favorite wife. And while the two drank in the enchanting loveliness,

Then the English youth broke the silence. Though he did not take her in his arms or kiss her, Pat, startled, heard his ardent words of love. Her heart beat fast and she dared not speak when he whispered: "Long ask your promise to marry me."

CORONER'S JURY FINDS O'BRIEN IS DRIVER OF CAR

Inquest Held at Napanee Continued All After-noon

COURTROOM IS PACKED

Witnesses Testify Car Travelled at Rapid Rate

After deliberating over one hour a jury empanelled to inquire into the death of William Manchester McGreer, four-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy McGreer of Napanee, which occurred on March 25th last, found that the little boy was killed by a motor car driven by E. G. O'Brien of Belleville. The inquest was held in Napanee on Tuesday before a packed courtroom, Dr. D. R. Hall, Coroner of Lennox-Addington presiding and Kenneth Hess, Crown Attorney interrogating the several witnesses. Charles A. Payne K.C. of Belleville, was present in the interests of O'Brien and asked the protection of the court, while Walter Allore and James Deacon both of this city gave their testimony which was granted by the coroner. Although there were no actual eyewitnesses of the accident, the witnesses, who were called gave evidence of hearing screeching of brakes and of seeing the child picked from the sidewalk after the accident.

James Deacon, one of the occupants of the car told Crown Attorney that the party had stopped at Shannonville on the way to Kingston and that each of the three had a bottle of beer.

"Did you have anything to drink previous to starting your trip," asked the Crown Attorney.

"Nothing" said the witness.

"Tell in your own words what happened?"

"O'Brien took the curb in Napanee to avoid striking an old lady but I did not see the woman for I ducked my head. The car I should say went by the boulevard but I saw no children. The car was completely out of control."

"Did you go into the Paisley House in Napanee after the accident?".

"Yes."

Another Passenger Testifies

Walter Allore also a passenger in the car told of starting on the trip to Kingston stating that he had had two or three bottles of beer.

"Did anyone else have drinks that you know, when you were drinking?"

"I don't remember anyone.".

"Did you drink any of the liquor that you had with you on the way to Napanee?"

"No."

"What condition were you in?" "I was the worse of liquor."

"When did you go to sleep?"

"Before I reached Napanee and I did not realize anything until I was coming back from Kingston under arrest."

"Did you know, that the car left the pavement?"

"No."

"Do you remember going into the Paisley House in Napanee?"

"No."

The previous witness said "you walked in," commended the Crown Attorney.

"I do not remember," said the witness.

Photographs Produced

Harry Skitch, photographer of Napanee identified a number of pictures taken at the scene of the accident. While Dr. W. F. Duffett gave as the cause of death a fractured skull with severe internal injuries. Eddie Watts, Chief of Police of Napanee told of seeing the body of the child on the sidewalk and of the measurements taken at the scene. He testified the car travelled 190 feet from the first skid marks to where it straightened out and also, that it went 58 feet seven inches from where the first mark started until the child was struck. The police chief told the court he saw two other skid marks eight feet apart, one going around in a circle a distance of 39 feet. The curb at 11th point is five inches high, the boulevard three feet wide, the sidewalk four feet ten inches wide and the highway 24 feet, stated the witness.

"Do you know Allore and Deacon?"

"Yes." I met them in the police station at Kingston with one giving his name as O'Brien.

"Do you know how they got there?"

"Yes," they drove and on information secured a description of the car was relayed to Kingston and the three were picked up one mile out of Kingston.

"Were you given a number of a motor car?"

"Yes," by Fred Huffman, the number being W-2607 but later it transpired the car was numbered W-2687, O'Brien had a license for that number and the license was produced in court.

Harry MacDonald, hotel keeper of Shannonville kept of the three men stopping at his hotel on the day in question and each was served with a pint of beer.

"What condition were they in?"

"I would not say they were bad but I learned later, that Allore was slightly the worse for liquor. The party was only at the hotel a short time."

Car Travelling Fast

W. T. Shaver, resident near the scene of the accident told of watching a car approach from Deseronto at a fast rate of speed steering a "peculiar course with three in the front seat."

"What was the rate of speed?"

"That is a question for an expert, but I would say it was better than 60 miles per hour."

"That was your first intimation that an accident had taken place?"

"I heard the screeching of brakes and looking saw a car on the boulevard, which later shot away out on the road."

Asked if he identified any of the men in the car, the witness stated, that James Deacon was one, that he identified.

Fred Huffman told the court he left his work at about 11.5 p.m. and coming near the scene saw a car out of control on the boulevard and later tried to get the number, which he stated was W-2607.

"How many children were there on the sidewalk?"

"Three and after the car had passed, two children were on the sidewalk and one lying on the walk."

William Dibb, Miss Laura Rockwell, Mrs. Arthur Herion and Mrs. Lott McNabb all were in the near-vicinity of the accident and hear the grinding and screeching of brakes and three of them saw the car on the boulevard off the highway and later watched it straighten out and shoot away to the car actually strike the baby but it appeared to them that the car was travelling at a fast rate of speed and that it travelled a considerable distance on the boulevard before returning to the highway. A close description of the car was given by the witnesses, who saw the car and it corresponded with the actual car involved in the accident and described by the Chief of Police.

O'Brien is being held in custody and his preliminary hearing before Magistrate Ambrose Shea of Kingston will take place on Thursday afternoon at Napanee with Charles A. Payne, K.C., acting for the defence. It is expected, that a repetition of the evidence given on Tuesday will be heard again on Thursday. The jury empanelled to enquire into the death was composed of C. E. Benkes, foreman, F. B. Carsallen, M. Taylor, V. Colling, J. Murphy, P. Normile, P. S. Scott, E. A. Embury and George Greer.

Far Northern Mining Town Booms

Jack Carey
Founder of Cameron Bay

Instead of ships of the sea, the harbor of Cameron Bay is crowded with ships of the air. Scene at top shows a number of them at the booming mining town in the North Canadian reporter at Edmonton while enjoying a few leisurely weeks before boarding an aeroplane and hopping back to his work at Great Bear Lake.

By DICK JACKSON
(Central Press Canadian Writer)

Edmonton, April 1— Cameron Bay, that wind-swept settlement on the shores of Great Bear Lake, 50 miles this side of the Arctic circle, and the centre of Canada's northern mineral field, is destined to grow into a fair-sized town even if it does not reach the proportions of some of the famous mining centres of Northern Ontario.

This is the opinion of Jack Carey 37-year-old prospector, who arrived in Edmonton recently after four years spent in the far north mineral field. And Carey should know as he is be founder of the tiny outpost, nestled on the eastern shores of the huge lake.

Here is Carey's own story of his founding of the post of Cameron Bay, as he told it to a Central Press

"I was camped with small crew of men a few miles from the present site of Cameron Bay in March, 193, when Pilot W. R. "Wop" May, of Canadian Airways, swept down from the sky with instructions for the party to climb aboard and proceed to Cameron Bay.

"A few hours later I pitched my tent overlooking the bay and that same 16 by 12 foot tent was the first residence in Cameron Bay. It served as a hotel, hospital, general bangoli, and living quarters until the first shack was built a few weeks later by Jerry Murphy and Vic Ingraham of Murphy Services.

Hold First Banquet

"Later in March, after Murphy and Ingraham moved in with two big tents, Mrs. Ingraham sent a large turkey in by aeroplane and from the surrounding district 17 men mustered to hold the first banquet ever staged in Cameron Bay.

"To-day, three years later, over 17 buildings, including a doctor's residence, mining recorder's office, radio signals, flying company offices, three stores, Royal Canadian Mounted Police headquarters, a hotel and a post-office. There is a dance hall complete with a gramophone, two pool tables and a snooker table for the leisure hour."

Carey began his life in Lancaster, England and worked in the cotton mills when at the age of 10 and today he insists that for him at least the north country is the only place to live.

He left England for South Africa and fought in the Boer War. He prospected in Portuguese East Africa, where he first broke into the mining game.

In 1908 Carey came to Canada and three years later commenced his prospecting activities in Northern Ontario, where he remained for several years. He was among the first to prospect on the site of the now famous Kirkinger gold mines.

When the Great War broke out he joined up with the mining battalion from Timmins, Ontario, and saw active service for three years, during which time he won the distinguished service medal. For the past ten years he been prospecting in the Great Bear Lake and Great Slave Lake areas of the Northwest Territories.

Miss Nellie A. Hurd, adopted daughter of the Hurds, denied that step-father had been tortured and insisted in spite of his own free will a "confession" of infidelity with a neighbor woman and of his giving her $15,000.

SAYS PRINCE SANG 'RED FLAG' ONCE

Basil Maine Calls Him 'King's First Ambassador'

By THOMAS T. CHAMPION

London, Apr. 4 (CP)—That the Prince of Wales once sang the communistic "Red Flag" to his own accompaniment was revealed by Basil Maine in his biography, "The Prince: First Ambassador", published today.

A political argument was ended by the prince, the author asserted in everybody, striking up the air of the revolutionary song, on his banjo, writes Maine.

The author tells of another occasion when the prince was in the cornerstone of the new parliament buildings in Ottawa, Canada, ago. A labor procession arranged for the prince to be delivered to get out of hand but the prince took a leading part in the procession and won the marchers cheers.

On this same tour of Canada another uncontrollous glimpse of his Royal Highness was provided when 40,000 persons saw him sprint after a bareheaded man who had stolen it, putting it back on the man's head delivering.

"As for professional diplomacy," Maine writes, "the prince never had any ambition. He knew that as Since his coming of age he has shown a free and flexible mind that has impatiently cast off the shackles of diplomatic observances. The range of his interests has not been that becoming the bore that, also, the man or woman of goodwill so often is. That and his capacity for hard work has given him at the age of 40 the look of a man eight or ten years younger."

Prahs, Czechoslovakia, April 4— Anthony Eden, Rtiish Lord Privy Seal, received an assurance today from Dr. Eduard Benes, Czech Foreign Minister Czechoslovakia remains in perfect accord with Great Britain concerning the safeguarding of general peace and attachment to the policy of the League of Nations.

The British diplomat, who already had conferred on the European situation with Reichsfuehrer Hitler in Berlin, with Joseph Stalin in Moscow and with Marshal Pilsudski in Warsaw, talked only briefly with Dr. Benes, the organizer of the Little Entente, on his arrival here today.

Leaves By Plane for London

Shortly later he left by airplane for London following the issuance of a communique which said in part: "Captain Eden and Dr. Benes had a cordial and friendly exchange of views on all questions contained in the London Communique on Feb. third. The British diplomat reported as extensively as possible on his visits to other governments leaders, then heard Dr. Benes' explanation of the Balkan and Little Enstente viewpoints.

Their leading subject, it was believed, was Germany's rearmament with the League's policy of peace as the best present means for security.

"The aim of your journey touches the vital interests of Czechoslovakia," Dr. Benes told his visitor. "My country, through its geographical position, its history, policy, and aspirations, has a truce peace mission

In bold type the Daily Express says: "Let the government know now if a man or a gun is ordered out from these shores to Germany the government will be broken in that hour."

Uneasy Balance of Power.

"The danger just now," said the Times, "is that something may be established in the image of collective security which would inevitably degenerate into a system of hostile blocs and an uneasy balance of power.

"It is a matter of common knowledge now Hitler arrived some time ago at a figure which, in his view, German-aryan strength ought to be reach in relation to the present strength of his neighbors; but the Berlin conversations seem to have made it clear he is also willing, having disclosed his figure to discuss with them a proportionate all-round reduction.

"It is certain in any. case that he is still ready to renounce the construction of any weapons of which other countries are ready to deprive themselves. There seems at least to be an opportunity therefore for every government to renounce the construction of the weapons the largest tanks, or monster guns with a range of more than a score of miles.

"Hitler makes appeal also to international inspection of armaments. Hitler is ready to negotiate an air pact for western Europe, and for negotiation of an air pact for eastern Europe, probably as a proposal worthy of consideration."

EDEN INDISPOSED DURING FLIGHT

Cologne, Germany, April 4—(AP) Anthony Eden, Lord Privy Seal, on exhaustive tour of European capitals in search of a peace formula, was "indisposed" when he arrived here today from Czechslovakia.

It was said the British Lord Privy Seal would remain overnight instead of flying on to Croydon, where he had been scheduled to arrive at 6.30 p.m.

Captain Eden appeared tired as he left the plane he looked white and drawn and said "I have had a very rough passage and decided not to go on until morning."

$100,000 AWARD GIVEN EX-WIFE

Mrs. Bedford-Jones Wins Suit Against Present Wife

Chicago, Apr. 4 (AP) — "Heart balm" of $100,000 was awarded by a federal court jury today to Mrs. Helen Bedford-Jones of Evansville, Ind. In her suit over the affections of her husband, Henry Bedford-Jones, fiction writer who formerly lived at Napanee, Ont., the jury ordered a payment of this amount by Mrs. Mary Bernardin Bedford-Jones, the writer's present wife.

Defence attorney Earle Ewins announced after the verdict was read he would seek a new trial because the first and the second wives were residents of different states.

Neither Mrs. Bernardin Bedford-Jones, the loser, nor Mrs. Helen Bedford-Jones, the winner, were in court to hear the verdict. It was returned shortly after the jury having spent only two hours and 32 minutes in considering the affair.

The amount awarded the first wife was half of what she had asked. Bedford-Jones and his wife were divorced in 1928. He married Mrs. Bernardin, widow of an Evansville manufacturer, in 1929. On the witness stand he charged his first wife with "constant nagging" which drove him, he swore, to the verge of suicide.

But attorneys on the other side called the writer—just a boy—when he led his wife on until she was fifty years old, making belief he loved her.

They pictured the first Mrs. Bedford-Jones, now 52, as "giving him the best years of her life", and as deserted when "her chances of finding a life partner are nil".

Mrs. Helen Bedford-Jones, to be wed, was not in court when the verdict was telephoned.

"I am very much pleased. That's all I care to say, because the verdict speaks for itself."

The suit contained a "malice count", alleging a deliberate attempt to do her damage. If she is unable to collect the $100,000 she may have the writer's present wife sent to jail, her attorney said, for as long as six months.

13 SLOT MACHINES SEIZED BY POLICE IN NIGHT RAID

Fourteen Summonses Issued Charging Gaming House

FUNNY INCIDENTS

Cases Will be Heard on Monday in Police Court

Thirteen slot machines, that had previously been licensed by Belleville city council, were confiscated during an organized police raid shortly before nine o'clock Wednesday night. The machines were loaded upon a truck by city police and plainclothes officers and taken to the police station where they were placed under lock and key until the matter comes before the police magistrate. Fourteen summonses were issued charging gaming house keeping. The raid was carried out by the entire police force and a truck and continued northward. The entire raid was completed in less than one hour. Conviction and took a little less than 20 minutes to complete. It began at 8.45 p.m. by the clock.

Complaints Made

The raid followed continued complaints from local business men to P. C. Donnelly, K.C., County Crown Attorney, who after taking the matter up with higher officials, directed Chief Kidd to confiscate all slot machines alleged to be used as a gambling device. "Slot machines have become a public problem and there is no question about the large earnings on them, while school boys of teen age are allowed to play these machines without any benefit to anyone, could we believe," stated Mr. Donnan when questioned this morning.

E. J. REILLY FIRED BY HAUPTMANNS

'Just Ready to Apply For New Trial on New Evidence'

New York, April 4—(AP)— Edward J. Reilly today received notice of his dismissal as chief of the defense counsel for Bruno Richard Hauptmann and said the action came "just when we were going to present evidence for a new trial based on new evidence."

Reilly received the unsuccessful defence of the trial of the man charged with the kidnapping and murder of the Lindbergh baby and the new evidence would be the testimony of several persons willing to say they had seen a strange automobile loitering in the vicinity of the Lindbergh home near Hopewell, N.J. for four days before the kidnapping of the infant on March 1, 1932.

Four men, Reilly said, were in the car, and Hauptmann was not one of them. The Attorney said the license number of the automobile was taken and showed the automobile had been stolen.

Further evidence, Reilly said, would be based on the testimony of various persons who said they saw witness who testified during the trial of Hauptmann at Flemington, N. J. He was to be defended in the vicinity of the Lindbergh estate the morning of March 1, 1932.

Government Won't Budge Even to Seek Compromise Over Power Premier Says

Executive of Bond Holders Offers Two Percent Interest Cut

MEANS $3,600,000

Would Offer This Money Yearly to Reduce Hydro Payment

Toronto, April 4 (CP)—If holders of bonds of four Quebec Power Companies with which the Ontario Government is to terminate power purchase contracts desired a conference with him it would be pointed out Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn said today, but at the same time he stated the government would not depart from its announced policy.

Following the Premier's introduction of a bill Monday to terminate the contracts which he said were "illegal and unenforceable," bondholders met here yesterday and drew up compromise suggestions.

Reduced Rate of Interest

They offered acceptance of a reduced rate of interest on the bonds affected by impending cancellation of the contracts and pasting on to the Hydro Commission of the saving. The plan called for reduction of the interest rate on the outstanding bonds of the companies from the present average of 5.32 per cent to an average of 3.32 per cent. Effecting this would reduce the annual financial obligations of the companies by a total of $2,600,000.

"We have no intention of departing from the principles outlined in the bill," said the Premier commenting on suggestions of the bondholders.

"Province Hard to See"

"It's pretty hard to see a province" the Premier said, when informed of the suggestion of L. B. Weldon, Secretary of the bondholders group that the provincial government might be sued outside the province, in Quebec for example.

"What assets have we in Quebec" he asked.

Mr. Hepburn said all Ontario needed to do respecting the contracts was refuse to pay for them but in order to clarify the position the bill was intended to declare the province's intention.

Toronto, April 4 (CP) — Little opposition to the Premier's bill legislating that the companies concerned cancel their deals to secure compromise agreement with the Ontario government, caused a mild flutter in the House as the Hydro Power bonds on the Toronto market today.

Gatineau Bond Prices

The Gatineau issues gained a little more than a point and the Issuaharela bonds were accorded fractional gains. The high grade market was decidedly slow with no interest displayed in either the provincials or Dominions.

Toronto, April 4 (CP)—The executive committee of the bondholders of the four Quebec power companies, whose contracts with Hydro the Ontario Government proposes to cancel, today prepared to seek a compromise between the Ontario Government and the companies concerned.

Meeting here yesterday, representative groups of bondholders, formerly known as the Power Securities Protective Committee, decided to offer to accept a reduction of the interest rate on outstanding bonds of the companies from the present average of 5.32 per cent to 3.32 per cent.

$3,600,000 Cut

The two per cent cut, it was stated by committee members, would mean $2,600,000, would be used to reduce

Buchan Book for Jubilee

London, Apr. 4 (CP)—The contribution of John Buchan, new Governor-General of Canada, to the literature of the Jubilee year, King George V, will be published today.

The book is a striking tribute to King George V, his personality, and his work for the nation and the empire throughout the 25 years of his reign.

"His quick sympathy and kindliness have warmed the country and done something to warm a chilly world. When nerves have been breaking, his steadfastness has restored them, and when strife was fermenting he has spoken healing words," writes Buchan.

"The power of the throne lies in what it is, but the authority of the king lies both in what he is and what he has done. With Queen Mary and his family to aid him he has made Great Britain and not only a nation but a household.

"The king has done for more a people's king than when an Edward or a Henry returned in triumph from French wars.

"Since Tudor times the phrase has been the King's duty and to-day, an older form of words is more fitting — the King's Grace. The king is the chief among first classes. He is as much akin to the worker in the mine and to the laborer in the field as he is to the highest nobility.'

SUDDEN RICHES

CONVICTS CHOP OFF THEIR FEET

Authorities Blame Influence of Dead Desperado, Barrow

Houston, Tex., Apr. 4 (AP)—The late desperado, Clyde Barrow, was blamed today for introducing the self-mutilation idea at the Retrieve prison farm where several convicts have chopped off their feet.

The Barrow influence at the Angelina, Tex., institution was disclosed by Lee Simmons, general manager of the prison system, after Governor James V. Allred ordered an investigation into reports convicts had mutilated themselves because of the brutality of guards.

"We found six convicts who had chopped off their feet with axes or collateral themselves in other ways," Simmons said.

"The convicts have been given liberty only with maimed injuries; stationary or a little higher temperature.

Glamor of Spring Seen in Fashions

Canadian Department Store Style Show at Belle Theatre

Fashions for Springtime made their glamorous appearance at the Belle Theatre last evening when the Canadian Department Stores presented a Style Revue to the delight of a very large audience. With milady's immediate requirements in mind, smart coats and wraps predominated, with enough gowns to give the general trend and a Regency wedding group as a lovely finale.

Miss Helen Smith as a charming hostess announced with placards the features of each group and six graceful mannequins displayed the garments. They were Misses Jean Wheeler, Patricia Kirby, Helen Findlay, Evelyn Shortt, Daisy McDonald, and Mrs. M. Brooks. Little Miss Dorothy Bishop and Master Billy McIntosh captivated the audience in their brief appearances and throughout the show the Commodores provided music.

The mannequins first introduced knitted suits which have a high bid for popularity this Spring. In "scrambled" shades these suits should have an important place in the wardrobe of the sportswoman or those who are merely spectators at the games. The trim appearance of the suits last evening and the endless variety of their shades were very appealing to the fashion-wise.

The afternoon dinner and evening dresses developed in chiffons, nets, rough crepes and lace, show the "tailored" influence for sheer and beautiful gowns. Here one found the most delectable frocks assuming a very dress air. High necklines, simple collars and three-quarter length sleeves distinguished the evening mode. Brown lace was fashioned in simple tailoring style in one model, with pleats, if you please, a snug little collar, a pocket, and only a huge cluster of white and coral flowers for colour contrast. Mary Maud pink also struck a distinctive note in a two-piece afternoon dress of taffeta while printed materials made their importance felt in a bevy of interesting frocks.

With feminine shoppers considering the Spring coat problem, this apparel made a particular impression on the audience and women are delighted to find that in this matter, Fashion has been very lenient. One can choose tailored wear, swagger sports coats or the more conservative dressy models of navy blue. One model combined two colors, navy blue and gray giving the appearance of a blouse and skirt. The beauty of the tweed fabrics in coats and suits was striking. Soft beige tones, checks and plaids, not too pronounced, and the unusual new tone of mustard were all noted by the attentive audience. The stray suit was a great favorite and was received with applause. In dust-beige is combined one of a plain toned top coat trimmed with plaid, plain suit coat in the Norfolk jacket style, and two skirts, one plaid, the other beige. The variety of combinations should find immediate favour for those who like their Spring ensemble with a dash of the unusual.

A two-piece checked wool suit had an artful brown bow just under the chin and in addition, a cape which could be detached from the jacket at will.

Fashions for very little folks were shown by Miss Dorothy Bishop and Master Billy McIntosh in their delightful tour on a bicycle built for two and their stroll on the boardwalk in Easter coats. Their appearances were eagerly awaited by the audience.

The latest coiffures, by Violet Lewis, were shown by the mannequins.

For the finale, the Canadian Department Store presented a picture from the past, in a beautiful Regency wedding. The wedding procession began with Miss Patricia Kirby in a trailing gown of Regency orchid with purple sash, and quaint poke bonnet. Then came Miss Helen Findlay in Jubilee blue chiffon and Miss Evelyn Shortt in Margaret Rose pink, a graceful gown with three quarter length pleated sleeves. Mrs. M. Brooks wore the popular dove gray of the period and the lovely bridesmaid, Miss Daisy McDonald, wore pale pink satin in true Regency style. The charming bride was Miss Jean Wheeler whose white taffeta gown with full, bloused sleeves, and adorable Regency bonnet made a picturesque costume that made one sigh for the days of "elegance". Mr. Frank Johnson was the groom of the wedding party brought to a close a particularly colorful and enchanting Fashion Revue.

As an added treat for the audience, the Belle Theatre presented four prizes to four lucky ladies. The tickets were drawn by little Miss Barbara Perham and the winner of the walnut end table was Miss Ingram. Three consolation guest tickets to the Belle for the Easter presentation of "Roberta".

FLAG PRESENTED TO MASONIC HALL

District Deputy W. C. Mikel Pays Official Visit

After the inspection of Moira Lodge, A.F. & A.M. Wednesday evening by Rt. Wor. Bro. W. C. Mikel, D.D.G.M. the members and visitors adjourned to the banquet hall where the toast to Grand Lodge was proposed by M. Wor. Bro. W. N. Ponton, K.C., P.G.M., and responded to by Rt. Wor. Bro. Mikel. He said that the first Grand Lodge consisted of 3000 Masters who were gathered together in London by the joining of King Solomon's temple thirty centuries ago. It was only in recent years that the people who are generally conceded to be the lost Ten Tribes of Israel and known as the people who have kept alive Free Masonry existed. Lodges of Masons existed in the British Isles "from a time to which the memory of man runneth not to the contrary". In 1717 however, these scattered Lodges in England were formed into a Grand Lodge, and in 1792 the scattered lodges in Upper Canada were formed into a Provincial Grand Lodge under Rt. Wor. Bro. Wm. Jarvis as the first Provincial Grand Master and the existing Grand Lodge is the successor.

Free Masonry though not a charitable or benevolent institution in Ontario dispenses more benevolence in that Province than any other organization.

Rt. Wor. Bro. Mikel took occasion to present to the Trustees of the Masonic Temple a Union Jack flag which was hung in the banquet hall. In doing so he quoted the lines "It is only a few days since the Union Jack, the old coloured rag. Yet thousands have died to defend it. On ocean and mountain and crest". This is the flag that represents every part of the British Dominions. It was the flag of the Thirteen British colonies and even after the declaration of independence the flag of the new republic consisted of a Union Jack and thirteen red and white stripes, until about a year later, when the flag replaced the Union Jack.

Rt. Wor. Bro. J. W. Barlow called attention to the fact that fifty years ago that date he had joined the forces that went to quell the Riel rebellion in 1885.

MORPHINE TABLET THEFT REPORTED

Police Seek Woman as One Who Robbed Office of Dr. VanLuven

Provincial Police have been searching for the past 24 hours in quest of a woman, who is alleged to have entered the office of Dr. O. VanLuven of Consecon yesterday noon and stole two bottles of diacetyl morphine tablets.

Information of the robbery reached the D. P. P. yesterday afternoon and all channels of escape from Prince Edward County were closed, but, apparently the mysterious woman had evaded the police net. According to the story related to the police by Mrs. VanLuven, wife of Dr. VanLuven, a strange woman came to the doctor's office shortly after noon on Wednesday, requesting an interview with the doctor. Upon being informed that the doctor was out the woman patient decided to await his return. Upon the return of the doctor, however, the patient had disappeared. It was following this mysterious disappearance that Mrs. VanLuven became suspicious and upon looking over his stock found two medium sized bottles of morphine missing. He immediately notified the police.

According to O. P. P. today, the identity of the woman is believed to have been established following the description of her given by Mrs. VanLuven. Further investigations are pending.

If Hon. Mr. Hepburn is RIGHT the Courts will uphold him. So why deny an appeal?

The Prime Minister of Ontario proposes, by an Act of the Ontario Legislature, to cancel certain contracts entered into by the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission with four Power Companies. These contracts were entered into in good faith by both parties. They were passed upon by able lawyers representing the Government of Ontario, the Hydro Electric Power Commission and the power companies.

The Prime Minister now says these contracts are illegal and unenforceable. Very well. He is entitled to his opinion. But why does he refuse to test the accuracy of his opinion in the Courts?

The power companies' bonds are directly held by nearly 75,000 people in Ontario and indirectly by hundreds of thousands of people in Ontario and throughout Canada, through the medium of ownership of Life Insurance Policies, Savings Banks Deposits, Trust Company Certificates, and so on.

The average person may not know that an individual or corporation cannot sue the Government unless the Government gives them permission to do so. This permission is called a "FIAT".

Surely, if the legal advisers of Ontario's Prime Minister are right, then they need not fear that the Government itself will not be upheld by the Courts. But if they are afraid to issue a "FIAT", or permission to sue, the question is "ARE THEY RIGHT?"

We have respect for the Prime Minister and for the Attorney General. But they should not be a law unto themselves. We cannot believe that in repudiating power contracts they are carrying out the wishes of citizens.

We say nothing in this announcement concerning the disastrous effect that the proposed legislation has already had upon the credit and good name of Ontario which, until a few weeks ago, was regarded as unassailable.

13 SLOT MACHINES SEIZED BY POLICE IN NIGHT RAID

Summonses have been issued the operators of these machines by the court today charging them that they did unlawfully keep and maintain a disorderly house; to wit, a common gaming house.

Filed on Truck

Excitement ran fever-high on Front St. when it was learned that a police raid was on. Hundreds of curious citizens lined the streets and either followed the police truck collecting the machines, or dashed ahead of the police in order to watch the proceedings at the next point. Some rather amusing incidents were disclosed during the raid when one man, who apparently had been fore-warned of the proceedings is reported to have hurried his slot machine into a waiting automobile and taken it away from the place of business. Shortly after arrival of the police, however, the owner shrugged his shoulders and asked where his slot machine was. Later he produced it, however, still another operator was seen. It is said, taking his machine down into the cellar just as the law arrived. "Hey, where are you going with that machine?" shouted a burly officer.

"Me just helping you get machine", sheepishly came back the lad.

14 Summonses

Only 13 of the 21 known licensed machines were confiscated during last night's raid, authorities not stating what disposition would be made of others which ceased operations immediately upon information of last night's proceedings.

When queried by the press today Town Attorney B. C. Donnan K.C. stated that although the machines had been licenced for amusement purposes, licence had been violated it was alleged, by numerous operators and gambling allowed. "We have some little proof of gambling on these slot machines and intend producing it at the trial on Monday," stated Mr. Donnan as he intimated that the Crown was ready to proceed with charges.

The list of places raided last night and to whom summonses will be issued today are:

Machine "For Amusement"

Shortly afternoon today a local operator of slot machines installed a new machine in place of the one confiscated by the police last night. Displayed on the new machine is a prominent sign, informing those desirous of playing the machine that such play is "for amusement only" and the slugs won have "no commercial value whatever." Other machines about the city, not in last night's seizure were also left in position, but carried the warning that no premiums would be exchanged for slugs. In conversation the operator who installed a machine in place of the one confiscated last night, stated he had procured a license to operate a slot machine for amusement and was doing so in a lawful manner. No comment on this procedure was made by police authorities, however.

RUTHLESS CANCELLATION UNJUSTIFIED

Proposal to cancel the electric power contracts with Quebec power companies for delivery of power to this province for the use of the Ontario Hydro Electric System of Ontario has caused more dicussion than any other action of the present administration. While a few feel a sense of relief from the burden of paying for power which is not being used, there is in others the firm conviction that the action if carried out will mean ultimately greater loss to Ontario than the payments for power used.

Premier Hepburn claims that the contracts are illegal, void and unenforceable, but holders of the bonds of these companies claim that the agreements are legal and that they bought the bonds in good faith on the strength of the province's contracts with these companies.

The losses today in the value of the bonds, sustained so far by theholders of bonds of the companies involved run into millions. Even Gatineau which are not included in the contemplated cancellation have shown declines.

It is a very serious thing for the Government to scrap agreements. Such ruthless action is bound to undermine the confidence of investors in Government issues. In this case the holders bought bonds because they felt that they were buying the very best securities in the Dominion because the Ontario Government had contracts with these companies. It is well-known that many of the holders of these bonds are persons of moderate and small means who will feel loss in drop of values very keenly.

But the province should not fail to carry out any undertakings any more than an individual should do with his agreements even if there should result real stress and stringency.

The province's credit is just as tender and fearsome as that of an individual, and if Ontario should have to pay more for its loans or if Ontario in the future required to buy power which it could not quickly enough develop, what assurance would those who would be willing to lend money or to sign contracts with Ontario have that the present situation would not be repeated in the case of another stringency or emergency.

There should be greater effort at negotiations with the power companies for a possible modification of the terms if they are considered too stringent. That action would be better than repudiation for it would give room for a possible compromise, which is much more to be desired than such ruthless scrapping of agreements as the Premier upholds.

This ruthless course of cancellation is not justified and the government does not seem to be doing so displaying very much faith in the industrial improvement of this province to take the view that the Premier has taken. Eastern Ontario some years ago had a bad experience of a power shortage and no one who went through that experience but felt that it was preferable to have an adequate reserve of power to meet an emergency of demand than to run the risk of shortage. The province entered into these contracts expecting extension of demand for power, that is clear. Former Hydro commissioners stated that the province could not afford to be caught short of power and that there was a margin beyond which it was not the part of wisdom to go. The Quebec power companies were ready to carry out the terms of the contracts and Ontario should be also ready to carry out its commitments. At least there should be no cancellation nor repudiation of the agreements. Rather than that a compromise with modifications would be the only possible step for a self-respecting province to seek.

STILL HUNTS FOR WORDS

Dr. F. H. Vizetelly, dictionary-maker, is 71 years old this week and still is on the hunt for new words. How many men are in his class, able at seventy-one to follow their life calling.

Incidentally he tells of the English language possessing 800,000 words, besides many which do not find their way into the covers of dictionaries. Slang words, however, find their way in after a time if they possess permanency of character.

He finds new words by combing newspapers, periodicals, literary issues and book reviews. He hunts through not only U. S. but English, Canadian, Australian and New Zealand newspapers. He on his birthday made references to the new word "quintuplets" which is rendered permanent by the multiple birth at Callander, Ont.

There is one thing about Dr. Vizetelly's work—it inspires. To find a word is of more interest than Alexander's glee at finding a new world to conquer.

LOVE STORY

A newspaper office, believe it or not, is the center of the world. Any newspaper office. And the city editor's desk is the cross-roads of the center of the world. Everything that happens comes to the city editor. If a man invents something—he tells the city editor. If a man is killed—someone tells the city editor. If the mayor wants new taxes—and what mayor doesn't?—the story flashes over to the city editor.

A great many happenings never get into print. Every newspaper holds out—because of lack of interest to any large group—much more news than it prints. And, frequently, one day brings a story that is forgotten the next. Frequently.

That is why this is a story.

One day, an unidentified girl killed herself in her little furnished room in Brooklyn. Just a run-of-the-town suicide, if it hadn't been for one thing. She left a poem.

The poem, while not exceptional, was still of fair merit. And it was printed. A clipping from the newspaper morgue—or reference room—recalls the lines:

"Our love was once a lovely thing
With hope as bright as Summer's sun—
Such golden gifts do minutes bring
When love is new and two are one.

"We pledged our precious love each day
And laughed Old Demon Care to scorn,
While happiness in bright array
Bedecked with rainbow hues the morn.

"No sweeter song could angels sing
Than that I sang for you, my own;
No greater gift could angels bring
Than that I brought to you alone.

"But black the skies of stormy dawn,
A prophecy of dreary rain;
And black the heart when love is gone,
Ah, mine shall never live again."

"Some love-sick kid," the city editor said. "Probably deserted. Wonder who she was."

The reporter didn't know.

"She cut off all the name tags from her clothes and marks from her laundry," he said. "We couldn't find them. Probably burned."

The city editor grunted, and ordered the story written with the poem.

"Wonder who the fellow was?" he said.

The re-write man incorporated that "angle" in the story when he wrote of the suicide. The story, as it appeared in the Chronicle, concluded: "The body, unless claimed, will be buried in Potter's Field."

Now that was the extent of the interest the newspaper could take in the nameless love-sick girl. The roaring mill of news gives no time for a look back—or to lament with unfortunates who are past help. So, the story was, in the office of the Chronicle, forgotten.

However, one man did not forget the story.

He was Dip Kopply—an alias as everyone knows. Dip was, as his name implied, a pickpocket. "Dapper Dip" he had been known, but he had allowed his clothes to become seedy and ill-fitted. He lost the glorification of "Dapper" among his friends.

Now, if you know your underworld, you know that a yegg sticks to safe-cracking, a stickup man to holdups, a dip to picking-pockets. Frankly, it takes a result if the tiger tries to change his stripes.

And Dip Kopply tried to change his stripes—into that of a holdup man—and found trouble.

He was shot to death in a payroll robbery.

Police who shot him looked at his body casually.

"Looks like Dip Kopply," one said.

"Can't be," another answered. "Dip's a pickpocket."

However, as you know, it was Dip.

In Dip's pocket, when they searched his body, they found the bill poem of the unknown girl. Also an even hundred dollars. One bill. That was folded inside the poem—to which the lines, 'The body, unless claimed, will be buried in Potter's Field," were attached.

"Why the sap," one policeman said. "He was trying a stickup to get money to give her a fancy funeral!"

"Now he's dead," another said, thoughtfully, "And she must have been his girl."

The three policemen looked into each others' faces.

One slipped the hundred dollar bill into a pocket.

The others nodded.

The newspaper story that carried the news of Dip's death carried the line:

"Dip Kopply will be buried in Potter's Field."

And near by, written about the same time, was a "short" item which said:

"One hundred dollars has been received to provide burial in Overland Cemetery of the girl who killed herself for love."—King Features Syndicate, Copyright 1935.

MAPLE SYRUP

Sap flow this year was marked by a rather early tie-up for a time and then a large flow with the coming of cool nights and mild days. Last week-end saw a large offering at the city market and it is believed that Saturday will find large quantities offered by the owners of maple bush.

The quality of the syrup offered this year has been uniform to a greater degree than heretofore, thanks to uniformity of equipment. A probable factor is the fact that there is a large market for the product everywhere and that hence regulations as to syrup and sugar are closely followed.

SONG AT DUSK

Now in the west a great star Burns
Above the gently curving hill—
Now lover's step to lover turns
Following the feet of beauty still.
Now in the purple bell the bee
Dreams between amber dusk and dawn;
Pale buds unfold ecstatically,
Pale shadows glimmer and are gone.

—Waken the wings of night, and wake
Whispers of shining silences.
Faint unseen petals stir and shake
Intoxicating essences
Upon the hour. . . . Swifter the wing—
Warmer the star above the hill. . . .
And love seeks lover, following
The silver feet of beauty still.

GRIP, a weekly publication, after the manner of Punch, edited and adorned by Bengough the cartoonist, full of wit, humor and satire, very popular in the eighties, had the following paragraph in the issue of Saturday, 31st of January, 1880:

"Queen Victoria is very fond of the drama, and Mrs. Davenport (Fanny, no doubt) says the profession is indebted to her for a valuable idea—that of turning the lights of the audience down during the acts, and up between them. The advantage was so obvious, and royalty having suggested it—it at once became the rule."

Grip nailed this slogan to its mast head: "The gravest Beast is the Ass; the gravest Bird is the Owl; the gravest Fish is the Oyster; the gravest Man is the Fool."

A Sidelight Fan, finding a number of copies of Grip in the attic has kindly loaned them to the editor for inspection.

CANADA PACKERS, LIMITED, held the annual convention of the firm last week in Toronto. Over five hundred salesmen sat at the banquet, and the dean of them all was Charlie Jeffrey, of Belleville, who was the first traveller East of Toronto for Harris Abattoir, now a part of Canada Packers. Charlie was an honored guest at the head table and told the boys of today some of the difficulties which beset the travelling salesman of thirty, forty years ago. Although retired from active service on the road, Charlie Jeffrey is still hale and hearty and on the officers' reserve list of the Company subject to call in emergency. Charlie says if all the meat he sold when on the road were reconstructed and placed end to end there would be a string of beef, lamb, pork, etc. right across the prairies from Winnipeg to the Coast, with a double line over the Rocky Mountains.

LOOKING BACKWARD

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS

20 Years Ago

April 4th., 1915

Miss Minnie Sills of Belleville spent some weeks in Chicago this winter the guest of her sister, Mrs. William Robertson. Miss Sills returned to Belleville early this month.—Chicago, Belleville News for March 4.

A party of young people from this city invaded Mr. Hubbell's sugar bush in the third concession of Sidney yesterday Mr. Hubbell proved to be a good host and put up large quantities of taffy, made sugar and syrup at the disposal of his guests.

St. Andrew's Y.P.S. of Stirling Visits West Huntingdon Group

Program For The Evening is Provided by Visitors

Stirling—On Monday evening April 1st, nearly the entire membership of St. Andrew's Young People's Guild motored to the West Huntingdon and put on the entire program for the evening. Rev. J. A. Kofford, minister of both congregations, called the meeting to order, and after a short address called on the president of the Stirling organization for the charge. Mr. Harold Ashley on behalf of the West Huntingdon people gave a splendid address of welcome to the visitors, to which the chairman made a fitting response, "in return for the fine hospitality shown," he said, " the Stirling visitors hoped their program would be constructive as well as entertaining." After the singing of "Onward Christian Soldiers," Miss Ashley offered led in prayer and Miss May Johnson read the scripture lesson. A solo was followed by a solo by Arthur Duncan, accompanied at the piano by Charles Allen.

The first part of the topic was dealt with by Mr. Roy Juby, who took as his text "What we have to offer others." In the course of his address he stated that we are too much inclined to under-rate our natural gifts which were given to us for the purpose of sharing. Unconsciously we slip into the same rut as the one who hid his talent in the field of Talents. The smallest offering we can make to the benefit of God's men or to the benefit of our fellow creatures is a mighty gift in the eyes of God. We must all seek out the talent we possess and by investing it in the proper place the dividents are bound to be large. Often great crisis arise we can offer prayers for those who are faced with the problems, and by so doing, bars in a measure in the subject of them.

Mr. Charles Allen gave a very delightful piano solo as this was followed by Miss Inez Rigle who continued with the topic, "Training." "What it costs to share", "in spite of the great demand for workers in the Home field, splendid work in that field of activity are seldom filled again and again that more preparation is needed and that is a part of the cost," said Miss Rigle. She spoke of the urgent need for workers as Dr. and Mrs. Goforth, Dr. and Mrs. Mellow and Dr. and Mrs. Mackenzie, many others showed a willingness is essential to true discipleship. The "self" crucified has been used in such a cheap sort of way in recent years that it had lost its meaning.

This was followed by an interesting reading given by Miss Moffat, "The Sorry Hostess" by Edgar Guest. Arthur Duncan then offered another solo.

Mr. Harold Baker took the conducting portion for the evening's discussion and spoke on "Making an Inventory." "Why should make a yearly reading or our life. How do we stand this year. We are in the world as part of the economic and social structure. What are we doing about it? What is our attitude to the poor this year? Education, skill, growth in character, growth in spiritual life, sense of responsibility. What have we failed to gain? What opportunities have we missed for development? What have we stored up that should have been invested? Friends, entrances, and opportunities which we have turned to selfish gain, rather than for service. God's plan for each of us is accepted will lead us to the best and noblest end possible. We must find it to get the most out of life." Mr. Baker gave brief and appropriate poem to close his topic, entitled "The Piper Thought."

Miss Helen Pitchett gave two splendid recitations which were much enjoyed by all, "Peter Piper" "I ain't going to cry no more." The meeting was closed by the singing "Blest be the tie that Binds" and the repeating of the Mizpah benediction. After which lunch was served by the hosts and a very pleasant social hour enjoyed by all.

St. Paul's Young People's Society. The regular meeting of St. Paul's Y.P.S. was held in the church parlours on Monday evening April 1st. The President, Mr. Harry Shalin, took charge of the devotional period and opened the meeting with a hymn. Mr. Clarence West read the scripture lesson found in 15th Corinthians, and Rev. E. W. Rowland led in prayer. The minutes of the last meeting were read by the secretary, Mrs. Nora Westcott. The President then called on Mr. Harry Lockwood to take charge of the remainder of the program.

The topic for the evening was dealt with in a very capable manner by Orville Lake, Lloyd Rowland and Mr. Lockwood. Mr. Lake told an evangelistic story of a Scotchman who overcame his weakness through Christianity. Known throughout the city in which he lived as drunkard John. He was generally known as the new John as the purifying work of Christianity did its work in his life. This topic which was upon Christianity was well given by the three speakers taking part. Each in his turn setting forth a separate line of thought. Mr. Lloyd Rowland spoke after Mr. Lake, and was followed by Mr. Lockwood. Every one enjoyed the manner in which the important features were brought forth by each of the speakers.

Mr. Harry Vandervoort offered a fine guitar solo, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Rowland. This was followed by a soprano solo by Miss Laura Mason. "In the garden of your heart," accompanied by Mrs. Rowland. At this point of the program there was an open discussion by several members of the society on the prevention of war from a Christian viewpoint. The discussion was a timely one and a very interesting one for the various speakers were constructive and provided a great deal of serious thought on the part of those present. Mr. Harry Lovibond then put on an interesting contest in which the blue side gained the honors. The colour scheme showed an attendance of fifty one member present. This fine program was brought to a close by repeating the Mizpah Benediction.

The many friends of Mr. George Livingstone will be pleased to learn that he is very seriously ill at his home here. Mr. Livingstone has been ailing for some time but at present his condition is much more serious.

Colonel Darius Green and wife of Bayside visited in Stirling on Monday afternoon.

"In Flanders' Fields"

WAR came! The nations of Europe were wofully ill, each other each for the spoils that victory would bring.

It is 1914, there was the Sarajevo incident, when Archduke Franz Ferdinand was assassinated. This led to the Austrian declaration of war on Serbia on July 28; on August first, Germany and Russia declared war on each other; on the third, Germany declared war on France and proceeded to march through Belgium; on the fourth with scarcely a voice dissenting, Great Britain declared war on Germany.

All that could possibly be done to avert the war was done by King and Queen, but in constant communication with Nicholas of Russia and Wilhelm of Germany, both of whom were of the same family as the King. But every effort he made failed.

Immediately on declaration of war, the King and Queen "cleared the decks" for action. Though the King was commander-in-chief and admiral-in-chief of the British forces, he never interfered with his ministers and military naval leaders. He kept always in close touch with affairs and not long after the war started, he visited France to see for himself how matters were progressing. Both the King and Queen gave up every luxury and lived with the utmost simplicity during the war years. He offered everything in his power to help in the work; no man worked harder without actually being in the front line trenches, during the four hectic years.

He made several journeys to the trenches in France and Belgium; he allowed the Prince of Wales to take an even more active part in the warfare.

Our picture to-day shows the King wearing a "tin hat" inspecting conditions in which his armies fought and died. No one wanted war less than King George; but no one was more willing and eager to fight and win than this same monarch.

GRANDMOTHERS HONORED BY W. I. OF SPRINGBROOK

Bonarlaw—The regular meeting of the Springbrook Women's Institute was held at the home of Mrs. (Rev.) H. W. Foley, Springbrook on Wednesday afternoon of last week, with an unusually large attendance of over fifty including several visitors.

It being Grandmother's Day, the roll call was "Memories of a Grandmother," to which there was a splendid response.

A letter was read by the Secretary from the Marmora W.I. inviting the Springbrook Branch to their April meeting, but unfortunately, owing to other community activities, it was impossible to accept.

A number of the grandmothers present donned clothing of former generations and marched into the room where the other members were assembled, took up positions near the piano, and sang "Silver Threads Among the Gold". Mrs. Sidney Mason acting as pianist.

The program was taken over by the convenor, Mrs. M. Fitzgerald. The following program, supervised by Mrs. A. Haslel, Mrs. J. S. McKeown, and Mrs. J. Eastwood, was given.—

No girl was considered to be ready for marriage until she could take the wool from the sheep, weave it into flannel and make a shirt for her husband. School teachers in those days received a salary of $10 per month for ladies and $12.00 for men, and boarded from house to house. In a home where there was one child they would stay one week, if two children two weeks, and so on.

Mrs. Arthur Burkitt gave a reading, "Occurrences of the good old days", which showed the advance of the young folks to be different from those of today.

Mrs. Will Stiles gave a reading, "Celebs Courtship" which proved that it was unwise to take a friend along when you went courting.

A contest was put on by Mrs. G. S. Eastwood. Each member had been requested to bring their earliest photograph which was arranged around the room, leaving the members to guess the names.

A contest was also staged by Mrs. E. McGowan, "A Violet Romance."

At the close of the meeting a dainty lunch was served and a social half hour enjoyed by all.

NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

WALL STREET

New York, April 4—(AP)—Securities markets took a little more heart today. Although cautious selectivity continued to dominate most categories.

Among Canadian stocks, shares of Montreal, Toronto and Canadian Pacific receded slightly, while International Nickel advanced a point or fractions to that much. Late Steel was a shade lower, Dominion Government bonds ruled narrow, and sedan funds were unchanged at 99 7-16 cents.

Walker and Co., preferred shares, recovered some 3 points. Other gainers of fractions included Sandy Fe, Union Pacific, American Smelting, U. S. Smelting, American Typhoon, Public Service of New Jersey, Western Union, American Water Works, Texas Corp, Standard Oils of New Jersey and California, U. S. Steel, Bethlehem Steel, National Distillers, Westinghouse, General Electric and Chrysler.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, April 4—(CP)—Volume was sharply contracted on the mining board of Toronto Exchange in the morning session today and prices were generally off.

Dome, Wright Hargreaves and Teck Hughes bucked a sale of two each with Dome off 25 cents to $9.50 and the others unchanged. Little Long Lac had a small advance, but Asiontio firmed 9 cents to 2.55 and God's Lake was up 4 cents to 1.39.

Base metal stocks and silver issues were unchanged.

Most of the action in the mining market today was concentrated in the penny group with losses predominating. Senior golds were mainly unchanged and medium-priced issues were holding a slightly better price level this afternoon in slow turnover.

McVittie was sold down to 14 and then rebounded rather sharply this afternoon on reported drill news. Consolidated Peninsular-Cobalt, Chibougamau and Towagmac were higher. Bobjo declined 20 to 3½ cents below last week's close. It sold above 70 last year's range was 1.01 to 1934. The oils continued subdued.

TORONTO INDUSTRIALS

TORONTO, April 4—(CP)—Beaubien Traction sold down to 8 1-4, its low mark for more than a year and the general tone was easier on the Industrial section of Toronto Exchange today.

An advance of 3-8 was showing this afternoon for Hickle along with a small profit for C.P.R.

Ford A, Walkers Common, Imperial Oil and Dominion Textile Common were unchanged. The McColl-Frontenac preferred issue was down more than a point.

Prospects of early equipment orders boosted the Canadian Car and Foundry Stocks and National Steel Car by 1-2 to 3-4 each. Banks, Constructions and Utilities were mainly unchanged. Bell Telephone exhibited a firming tendency, holding a half point gain at 121.

Fractional gold quotations in the early session of the Industrial Share Market were recovered as the list displayed losses in the early afternoon. Good buying of International Nickel on a price advance of 3-8 to 34 3-8 gave the market more bullish leadership. Aggressive buying however continued small.

Brazilian Traction sold at 8 1-4 its low for a year and was holding at 8 3-8 this afternoon, off 1-4. Ford A was steady and C. P. R. slightly higher. The Distillery and Oil group held fairly steady and Foods and Steel shares were inclined upward, particularly the railway equipment issues being Canadian Car and Foundry and National Steel Car.

HAUPTMANN CASE LEADS DIONNE 5

Journalism Students Take Poll on News Stories

New York, Apr. 4 (CP)—The birth and daily care of the Dionne quintuplets vied with the New Jersey trial of Bruno Hauptmann for the kidnap-murder of Baby Lindbergh as the leading news-story of the past year, in a poll of journalist students at New York University.

After a neck-and-neck race, the lengthy trial which brought the death sentence to the New York carpenter, was given 91 votes and first place. The multi-offsprings of Mr. and Mrs. Oliva Dionne drew 87 votes, while the Morro Castle ship fire, which cost 130 lives, was given 83 votes.

In the balloting on the year's greatest news figures President and Mrs. Roosevelt were given first place at the top of the male and female lists. Mrs. Dionne was ranked seventh behind Amelia Earhart, Barbara Milvard and others, but ahead of Greta Garbo, Princess Marina and the writing mistress of repetition, Gertrude Stein. Eleventh were the Dionne quintuplets themselves.

Dr. Roy A. Dafoe, who ushered the famous little Dionnes into the world, and who still guards their health, was placed eighth in the list of men who made news. The students figured these names were better copy than the little northern doctor.

President Roosevelt, Hitler, Senator Huey Long, Mussolini, Col. Charles Lindbergh, General Hugh Johnson, Father Charles Coughlin, Behind Dr. Dafoe came Babe Ruth and Stalin.

Pleads "Not Guilty" to Illegal Operation Charge

Ex-Mayor of Wallaceburg Has Preliminary Hearing Today

DOCTORS TESTIFY

Chatham, Ont., Apr. 4 (CP)—Dr. Stanley A. Bridgman, former mayor of Wallaceburg, faced Magistrate J. D. Arnold in police court today for his preliminary hearing on a charge of manslaughter, arising out of the death of Miss Edith Nicholas of Ariear who died in the public general hospital on March 4. He pleaded "not guilty".

It is alleged the woman died as the result of an illegal operation.

Dr. E. E. McPherson of Blenheim and Dr. E. I. Reid of Chatham asserted death was from infection and septicemia resulting from an abortion. The young man involved in the case, designated by the authorities as Mr. X, is said of paying the physician $60.00 for his work.

He also asserted prior to the girl's death he saw Dr. Richardson when mention was made of a statement signed by the girl at the time the other two physicians took up the case. He charged Dr. Richardson asked him to get this statement and for which he would pay him some money.

Who Stole Huge Key To London Court House?

London, Ont., April 4—(CP)—Although jail officials are reluctant to believe the worst, there remains a grave suspicion some dishonest person is in Middlesex county jail. Someone had stolen the big key to the front door of the county buildings, adjoining the courthouse.

It has been the custom for years to leave the key, a weighty old-fashioned affair about eight inches long, in the lock on the inside of the door during the day, when the janitor locks up at night, the key is taken to the boiler room, where it hangs until next morning.

Ravenous Ponies Supplant Dog Teams in Far North

by Central Press Canadian
Edmonton, April 4— The usual rigors of the trap line are no problem for Francis Wharton, Belvedere, Alberta, trapper and trader, who reached this Edmonton, recently from north of Cold Lake, a distance of 300 miles, behind an 800-pound loaded sled pulled by a string of three flesh-eating ponies.

The ponies—Billy, his mate Fanny and their daughter Nellie— go for anything when hunger gnaws, anything but peanuts. Hay, moose meat, fish in any condition, eggs the same way, muskrat flesh strong disinfectant, ice cream, waffles and any type of raw meat is just so much hay and oats to the omnivorous trio.

Trapper Wharton drives them like dogs,— in a string. He claims that they mush through the snow better than do the huskies. The trip from Cold Lake was made through four and five-foot snowdrifts in 11 days, the ponies eating en route, feeding from bear and moose that fell under the driver's gun. The ponies leap onto the carcass and start tearing at the flesh around the bullet wound even before the stricken animal breathes its last.

"Nellie got into a pail of soap and disinfectant the other day," proudly related the owner, who bought the strange feeders in Calgary three years ago, "and after she had lapped it up she was in good shape for beer which she drank out of a bottle."

The cavalcade, something new in northland transportation is heading back into the Cold Lake wilds.

Skyscraper Song

(Copyright 1935, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

If you had asked George Marshall what he early worked forwhen he was slaving on the Dreadnaught Skyscraper, he would have answered you quickly and decisively in one word. And that word would have been, "money." And, it might be said, he would not have been lying to you—intentionally.

Like many of hundreds of successful men, he had started as a penny man, and was very appreciative of the value of hard cash in wholesale lots. At first, he had done his work and a little bit more, and had gained raises in wages, and then raises in salary. By the time he was forty, he was working hard. He brushed off by himself when he was forty-one and made millions.

As a designer of skyscrapers, he was always listed in the first five. This was partly due to the fact that a skyscraper was more than a thing of stone and steel to him—it was a living, pulsating part of him.

People who think that an architect's job is finished when the final plans are approved should consider George Marshall. The plans were the least of his worries—he overlooked, personally, the carrying out of his dream. Day and night, he would climb over the skeleton frame, testing this and that and checking the stone and the wood, and scrutinizing the minor details that made for the successful, carrying out of his structure.

Work, Work, Work

To George Marshall this was efficient unto Itself. From one building he went to another—his life was full as the skyline with his skyscrapers. He gave himself no pause in the mad rearing of masonry. He thought in terms of building blocks and dreamed of skeleton monuments. His life which on the basis of his intelligence might have been a well-rounded affair was lopsided and architecture.

His homelife had long since become empty. His wife had grown tired of hearing him talk of nothing but building problems and join a group by whom architecture was as much a mystery as the Einstein theory—and no more interesting. His children, sent away to boarding schools, hardly knew him. George Marshall's whole life was centered in his work, and, happily, he was satisfied.

That is he was satisfied until one gray morning after the Dreadnaught Skyscraper had been completed to the public. This was the first morning in a dozen years that had not seen him rushing off to a new work. Always one skyscraper followed another. Now the depression had set in, and George Marshall had no problems to bridl.

At first awkwardly, he luxuriated in the new freedom. A vacation was not his style—he turned his attention to the sacred profession, and he dressed slowly.

He dawdled over the breakfast eggs. He spoke cheerily to his butler, and rode down to his office by the long route. A few letters there were answered in an hour. He had nothing to do and so he leaned back in his chair and looked out of his window at the Dreadnaught Skyscraper that soared into the sky a half mile away.

Then He felt a discontentment. Nothing to do. Nowhere to go. No one to talk to. He shivered slightly and put on his coat and went out ...strolling to the Dreadnaught. He stood in its lobby and looked about. The building superintendent came up and shook hands.

"Great building here," he said. "Now all we have to do is to rent the things. Tough job that. I mean a rental race sure with those other places half empty.

Rental Race

There were some more words and the superintendent hurried off and George Marshall looked after him, half dazed.

"Rental race ....?"

He went back to his office and opened an architectural magazine ...not his favorite but one of many that came into the office. He didn't like this one, it had a tendency to treat the sacred profession frivolously. On one page was a poem entitled "Skyscraper."

"I sing my song to work and man.
I sing to iron, steel and stone,
I sing to well-laid prime and plan
To days of flesh and blood and bone.

"A thousand toilers built the frame,
And welded strong the inner core;
A thousand days saw pits a-flame
To sear to steel the miner's ore.

"Then day by day, we saw it rise,
Up-quivered by brains and brawn and will.
We saw it meet the blue-born skies,
A creature built by blows and skill.

"The topmost stone is now in place,
The final, hurtling death is died—
All ready for a rental race
In this a city's pasping pride."

George Marshall read the back-breaking lines over again. He shivered slightly. He looked out of his window at the Dreadnaught, and other structures he had erected. Rental race! All his work for this! And in that second, George Marshall came to know the great futility of his life.

MILEAGE OF NEW G3 EQUAL TO 40,000 TIMES AROUND THE WORLD

G3 is new—but so many have been sold that based on a conservative annual mileage we can safely say—"G3 tires already have travelled more than a billion miles on Canadian cars." This takes G3 definitely out of the experimental stage. It is proven!

Goodyear engineers produced G3 to meet the strains and jars of modern traffic conditions. It maintained its tread pattern after the severest driving tests ever given a tire. Its performance resulted in the greatest sale in Goodyear's history.

GOODYEAR MEANS GOOD WEAR

Car makers—always careful in the selection of materials and parts—prefer G3 to any other tire as equipment on their latest models. It is a worthy running mate for the modern car—a tread that withstands the fierce grinding wear of today's faster starts, higher speeds, quicker stops.

G3 has extra-deep grooves—close-set diamonds—wider riding ribs. Go to a Goodyear dealer and compare G3 with the tires you are now using. . . . You'll understand at once why it far outsells any other tire.

G3 is made in both 4 ply & heavy duty 6 ply types

Two Great Teams to Meet When N. H. L. Classic Gets Away Tonight at Toronto

Maroons And Maple Leafs Stanley Cup Finalists

TEAMS ARE READY

Capacity Crowd of Over 15,000 Expected For Tonight

(By Elmer Dulmage)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, April 4.—(CP) — The best hockey team in the world—that is the best day-in-day-out machine over a 48-game stretch—enters the classic Stanley Cup wars here tonight as just one of two challengers for the prize won a year ago by Chicago Black Hawks.

Since the fall of 1933 when Toronto Maple Leafs shot ahead of the pack in the Canadian section of the National Hockey League and overpowered one and all until the final playoff stage, the Leafs have been accorded the honor of "greatest team" reference. They don't pay off on the refence, however.

After flattening all foes in the 1933-34 season the Leafs succumbed to Detroit Red Wings in the League finals while the Black Hawks won the Stanley Cup. Everybody had neglected to refer to the Hawks as even a great team, let alone use any such term as "greatest."

Now the Leafs have done it all over again, leading the Canadian section from start to finish. They have gone step further and won the N.H.L. title by defeating Boston Bruins (Cubs) in a best-of-five series. Montreal Maroons hoist the remaining barriers tonight.

Teams Evenly Balanced

Maroons, a big, fast and experienced team with Thomas P. Gorman directing, ruled today as virtually as strong as the Leafs in a five-game series. The so-called edge in the hockey had a slight edge in the general support that seemed evenly divided between the Leafs and Maroons. That was all.

Throughout the season—but not now—the Leafs maintained a record much superior to that of the Montrealers. Maroons finished second to Toronto in the section and opened their playoff campaign by taking the Stanley Cup from Chicago. Then they defeated New York Rangers. They won two of these games and tied the other two.

They came into town last night to face odds of only 5 to 6 against their chances of upsetting the Leafs. Manager Gorman hoped Maroons would get an even break in the two games here tonight and Saturday. The next two will be played in Montreal and if a fifth is necessary the teams will move back here.

A crowd of from 14,200 to 15,000 will watch the first game. There hasn't been a seat in Maple Leaf Gardens available since early yesterday. They were still selling standing-room today.

Smith a Casualty

Hooley Smith, Maroon centre, is the only major casualty on either team and the big fighter of Montreal's power line will play despite a broken thumb as he did against Chicago and Rangers. Jimmy Ward

KELLY THE HERO

REGIS "PEP" KELLY

Hero of the N.H.L. championship series in his first year as pro hockey — that's "Pep" Kelly, little Irish right-winger of the Toronto Maple Leafs, who scored one goal against Boston to tie up the fourth game after the Bruins had held a one-goal margin until only two minutes remained and then flipped in the winning tally after less than two minutes of overtime had been played. Kelly jumped from junior ranks to the Leafs this season. He has played on two previous championship teams, Newmarket two years ago and St. Michael's College Toronto, last year, both Canadian junior champions.

and Baldy Northcott will team with Hooley, who learned his hockey in Toronto.

It is likely that this experienced trio will be assigned to guard Charlie Conacher, Harvey Jackson and Joe Primeau, leading the oldest front divisions to fight it out. Or the Stanley Cup chieftain may decide to switch his forward lines at random.

Probable Line-ups

|---|---|---|

| Connell | Goal | Hainsworth |
| Wentworth | Defence | Day |
| Evans | Defence | Hollett |

Montreal Subs — L. Conacher, Shields, Blinco, Robinson, Trottier, Marker, Cain, Giraldo, Miller.

Toronto Subs—Clancy, Horner, C. Conacher, Jackson, Primeau, Bodnar, Metz, Kelly, Cotton.

Officials—Bill Stewart, and Billy Bell.

CHANCE SUN IS FAVORITE FOR COMING DERBY

Omaha, Son of Gallant Fox, Another Threat

DERBY ENTRY LARGE

By ORLO ROBERTSON

New York, Apr. 4 (AP)—The 3-year olds of the turf, seeking the right to rule their division, are rounding into condition for the first of the important tests—the $40,000 Kentucky Derby at Churchill Downs May 4.

Standing at the top of the list are J. E. Widener's Chance Sun, the future book favorite at 4 to 1 and leading money-winning two-year old of 1934, and William Woodward's Omaha, son of Gallant Fox, which won the 1930 running of the derby.

Chance Sun whipped most of the top notch juveniles in the $100,000 Belmont Futurity and defeated a good head in the Grand Union Hotel stakes at Saratoga to amass $85,-985 in earnings.

The colt has beaten many of the good ones entered in the derby and right now looks great," said trainer Pete Coyne.

Omaha looms forth as a more serious contender every time he goes out for a trial spin.

"I wouldn't say I have another Gallant Fox," said trainer "Sunny Jim" Fitzsimmons, "for they only come once in a lifetime but I believe I have a mighty fine horse in Omaha. He is just as good a front runner as the Fox but I would say he can come from behind better.

SARAZEN CALLED TO BEAT JONES

World's Foremost Golfers Compete at Augusta, Florida

By KENNETH GREGORY

Augusta, Ga., Apr. 4 (AP)—A little Italian, Gene Sarazen, bronzed from a blazing sun, drew the attention of the betting fraternity today as the mighty guns of golf were cocked for the second annual $5,000 Augusta National Tournament. They call it Bobby Jones' tournament, for it is the outgrowth of an ideal cherished by the retired world's champion, and as the field moved into action in the 72-hole campaign it was Sarazen who stalked the spotlight.

Quoted odds on Gene were 6 to 1, with Jones second choice at 8 to 1. The field seems a bit too fast for the great Bobby who has been missing from the tournament for five years and has lost the steadiness so essential to competition.

The opening round will be followed by 18-hole tours on Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Amerk. Speed - Skating Miss Proves All - Round Athlete

FAST-SKATING DOTs FRANEY

By MAURICE SMITH
Central Press Canadian Correspondent

Winnipeg, April 3—One of the greatest speed-skaters in the world today, Dot Franey, American queen of the sized blades, would much rather talk about Canada's beautiful than about her own ability to race around the glazed surface, proving that she is the ever dreamiest of. "In every city that I have visited in the Dominion the Canadian people have been simply marvellous to me. I want you to make sure you put these words right in the first paragraph of your story," says she. So there they are.

In Winnipeg for the Manitoba outdoor championships last winter, Dot set two Canadian records for the 440 and half mile. Setting records has become somewhat of a habit with this unassuming American girl.

Not yet 21 years of age, Miss Franey, who hails from St. Paul, Minnesota, is holder of eight world records, four outdoor and a like number indoors. She has already seen service on one U.S. Olympic team. That was in 1932 when she was only 17 years old.

Miss Franey did right well for herself in the winter games at Lake Placid. Since that time she has improved tremendously and has, along with Kit Klein of Buffalo, been selected to represent the land of Stars and Stripes in the 1936 Olympic at Garmisch, Germany. They are the only two women on the American team which will sail for Germany in the middle of November next.

There is no other girl star in the world to-day who can touch Miss Franey in her favorite events, the 220, 40 and 880 yards. She holds the world marks for these, both indoor and outdoor.

Is All-Round Athlete

Speed-skating is not the only sport that holds the affection of the St. Paul flier. She is an accomplished golfer, shooting in the low 90's. She simply "loves" to swim and also plays a fine game of basketball and softball. In the latter sport she has been a member of her state championship team.

Miss Franey is also quite a runner and has hopes of making the American Olympic track team. Her events are the 50 and 100 yards and the low hurdles.

But to get back to speed-skating. Miss Franey cannot understand why it is that Canada has not turned out more stars than she has. "Up here you have the most favorable conditions in the world for speed-skating." In her opinion Lela Brooks-Potter, Toronto is the outstanding feminine speedster turned out by the Dominion in recent years. She considers youthful Gladys Ferguson the best of the newcomers.

As for the men, there is nothing to touch Alex Hurd, formerly of Hamilton and now of Kirkland Lake, Ont., in the American style of speed skating. "He has all the American stars I know beaten in our style of racing which is from a scrambled start. In the European style which is racing against time, I think Eddie Schroeder is supreme."

Miss Franey knows that she cannot last in the top ranks forever. Following the Olympic games in 1936, she plans to go horseshoeing with the American team. Following that, she may turn professional and cash in on her ability. She has already had offers to turn pro.

PATRICKS VISIT AMATEUR FINALS AT HALIFAX

Leader of New York Rangers Looks For New Blood

(By George Maguire)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, April 4.—(CP)—Carefree as a schoolboy Lester Patrick rode toward Halifax today to enjoy the Allan Cup final

The head of New York Rangers hopes to get a line on several amateurs performing in the Canadian championship series who are reported "hot" for big time company.

The glaring hole in the Ranger rearguard must be filled before next season rolls around, Lester admitted, and he has hopes the player to do it will be found at Halifax.

Joe Cooper, husky Winnipeg defenceman, Bucko McDonald, Brooklyn Hamilton-Crescents this season, will be given a try-out with the Rangers next year as will Neil and Mac Colville, forwards and Hap Emdiner, goalkeeper all of Edmonton, and Alex Shibicky, forward of Winnipeg.

With the hope of having a farm team in the International circuit next season Patrick plans negotiating with some dozen or so other Canadian amateurs. These will report to the training school at Winnipeg next fall. Those who don't make the major league team will likely find a place in the minors.

Fred "Bun" Cook and Brother Bill of Rangers made their exit from New York just this time for Bun to miss a suit filed in court by Peggy Rich, actress charging injuries she suffered when Bun's stick struck her head during a game at the Garden "greatly impaired her earning power".

As Bunny has already crossed the Border and picked up his bond, guaranteeing his return to Canada, within six months, local hockey circles feel there is little the court or Miss Rich can do about the case in the near future.

MONTREAL ROYALS ELIMINATE STARS IN THIRD GAME

Toronto's Hand-Picked Team Beaten at Montreal 4-1

WINNERS ADVANCE

Allan Cup Semi- Finalists The Better Club

MONTREAL, April 4.—(CP) — Montreal Royals tonight move on to Halifax to represent the Maritime Eastern Canada Allan Cup final while Toronto All-Stars return to Toronto to discuss they fate as titlists to the power in the line of hockey. Norman Dilly Gerrmain and Hugh Farquharson, one of the rinking front lines in Canada.

Royals were the survivors of their semi-final series 4-1 last night, taking the odd game from the All-Stars.

Neville, brainy right winner, who came to the Montreal Hamilton three years ago, scored three goals although one of them was actually touched home by a Toronto defenceman and Farquharson got the other. Farquharson on his left wing point was in on most of them although his contributions came too far out from the goal to receive assists in more than one.

Vezina Gerrit collected the lone Toronto counter, Two Montreal goals came in the second period and one in the third when Toronto scored.

Hard-fought all the way, the game was lacking in the rough play that spotted the first two contests, at Toronto and Montreal. It was unanimously expressed opinion in the Toronto dressing room after the game. Coach Moose Scotstons said "I believe they will go on and win the Allan Cup."

Launching upon their third season of successful entreprise at their location in the Exhibition Park the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club commenced its season's activities when they held their annual meeting and election of officers the other night. For nine years back the local lawn bowlers had a rather rocky road to traverse, but now seated in their present quarters, and such ideal surroundings as are in evidence at their new greens, the club seemed to literally advance by leaps and bounds as the rejuvenation of "bowling on the green" is today quite in evidence. Last year a goodly number of new and youthful members joined the Belleville lawn bowlers and doubtless will bring other new members into the fold this season. All of the greens at the Pair Grounds have been sintered fine and will be in use from the opening of the season. Expenditures are being made in relationship of the enlargement of the club house, while several improvements are also in the making. Judging from outside appearance the Belleville Lawn Bowling Club is out of the mire and headed toward better times.

The scene is all set for the opening of the city basketball championship series in the city gymnasium tonight. All week the various squads of hoopsters throughout the city have been briskly been practising and eagerly looking forward to the city finals. This is the first year in which a recognized city final basketball series has been attempted in Belleville, but with the keen rivalry that exists between the individual players plenty of action should be assured. The "Y" intermediates are slated to be met with the R.C.I. senior interscholastic squad while the junior "Collegians" tangle with the Deseron A.C. crew. A slight change in the series was announced this morning, however, to the effect that the series would be of the round robin nature, with every team meeting the other three squads once. A total number of points emmassed during the series will be counted, and the team with the most points will be played next week.

We have been asked to announce that all interested in playing soccer football should get in immediate communication with Mr. Pinnington or Mr. Magill, these two men being at present engaged in the introduction of the game locally.

The Peterboro sport scribe resurrected his trusty cudel and waaled into us again yesterday and regarding that old bone of contention, hockey. First and foremost we might enlighten the Peterboro advertising medium by informing him that Ernie Gilbert is back home, called upon us and invited us to accompany him to Kitchener to attend the annual meeting of the O.B.A.A. If we "had the bee" on Mr. Gilbert it is not likely he would invite us to be his guest on such a trip. Regarding the so-called "erroneous impression" alleged to have been published by us, the Peterboro scribe recently admitted, that the C.O.B.L. recommendation was 'cast among the rubbish' by the O.B.A.A." thereby proving that such a document was forwarded to the parent body at least. Of course the O.B.A.A. did not wish to entertain such a proposal, it was quite in order. Surely the three letters published some time ago under Mr. Gilbard's hand was sufficient to acquaint the friends in relationship to not playing senior ball. We might state that the recommendation was not voted on by the C.O.B.L., but that recommendation was sent to the O.B.A.A. and the C.O.B.L. heads "knew" every letter of its contents.

While in conversation with Mr. Gilbard yesterday he informed us that he was endeavouring to form a league in this district to take care of local district intermediate "B" teams. "I have a proposition whereby Picton, Belleville, Brighton or Trenton and possibly Enterprise might join forces and form a compact intermediate "B" group," said Ernie. When asked if he would be considering a "B" team in such a league, the Napanee baseball mogul stated he was not sure, as he had not planned on operating two intermediate clubs this season, but to take a bye into the "A" playdowns. As stated by the Napanee magnate previously, the town is not large enough to support a senior club and then all such material will be thoroughly ironed out on Saturday at the O.B.A.A.

A new world mark for the marathon, 26 miles 385 yards, was claimed yesterday in Japan when a team of runners succeeded in running that distance in two hours, 26 minutes and 43 seconds. The Olympic record is two hours, 31 minutes and 36 seconds and was held by Juan Carlos Zabala of the Argentine. This last record was established during the 1932 Olympics at Los Angeles and when the new record can be recognized, the Olympic board must investigate its authenticity.

Local "jiney" gamblers, who have been playing the national game of trying to beat the slot machines, will have to look elsewhere for further diversion following last night's police raid.

With the Toronto "Stars" eliminated in the Montreal Royals in the Allan Cup play-downs last night the hockey scene turns to the N.H.L. tonight when the Maroons and the Maple Leafs clash in the first Stanley Cup game. Watch out that Maroons, they're tough medicine. Ask the Managers, they should know.

Guardians of the Desert

By TOM GILL

"That's another lie. You and your sirear men even every foot that can be irrigated north of the lake. I wonder if the people of Venice know that. I wonder if they know that through your influence with the Government all the public land between the Barrier is under your control? Do they know of your understanding with the Governor that allows you to graze cattle on state lands as far as the foothills? Does anyone here realize the absolute monopoly that you now have over every available foot of soil throughout the Verde country?"

He turned and faced the room. "Don't take my word for this. Why not learn the truth for yourselves? The records are in the offices of the Irrigation Company at this moment. Some of you men still have an interest in this company, Barnes had. Doctor Price has. Why don't you go with Sarf to their records then come back and tell us which one has lied?"

CHAPTER THIRTY-ONE

At the back of the room Doctor Price had risen. An old timer about Verde, the kindly, aging physician was one of the few friends of the desert country.

"I still appear to be a trustee of the Verde Irrigation Company at the request of my old friend Lowell Barnes," he said, "I am quite willing to go to the office of the Company and let Sarf lay everything before us. Whether these charges are true or false, it is time that my name be loaned our names to this work should know what is being done." He looked at Sarf, "Well?"

Like an animal at bay Sarf turned. Every countenance expressed demeanor had fled. He was more like a trapped wild thing now as he hurled back. "Those records can be examined only by a call of the majority stockholders."

Price's voice, hardened. "That means Solon Lowell and yourself."

"Exactly."

Angry murmurs were growing louder throughout the room. Men were rising to their feet and the hands of Sarf and his men at the guns as their waists. Only the slightest spark now, and the powder keg word to let loose red havoc in that crowded hall.

Above the uproar Dick Lowell's voice rang out. "Force an entrance, if necessary, Sarf. I'm with you. Let's find out, once for all, what lies behind Sarf's answer. If you men with Will Barnes and Doctor Price go with Sarf, all the doors are locked back them in."

Barnes rose and walked toward the door, his head held high in quiet excitement. "That's one invitation I don't need repeated."

With an almost imperceptible nod Sarf brought Bull Pasko to his side. Tawny eyes flashing, he whispered a few words to the man, then, in a voice brimming with hate, turned to set on Barnes, "I warn you not to set foot in my office."

Coolly Barnes drawled back. "Too bad. But that's exactly what I'm aiming to do. Definitely for you."

Bull Pasko had already edged up his poncho from the floor and there it rested, ready.

Once more Sarf's eyes blazed into the eyes of the man who, next to Lowell himself, had been the most feared barrier to his plans, then he turned to Pasko and his voice dropped in a silent signal. In answer Pablo took a step backward as the lariat ring was lost to view behind his chief.

Barnes already had crossed the hall, and called to Doctor Price, "Come on. You're about to put my foot through the office door of the Verde Irrigation Company."

But, as he turned Pablo darted from behind Sarf with drawn revolver and struck it at Barnes' defenseless back. Desperately Price threw himself forward, but in that same instant the crash of an automatic filled the room and Pablo spun half around, then crumpled slowly forward on his face. And now Lowell's still smoking gun pointed straight at Sarf, not ten feet away.

"Let no man move," Dick's low voice warned. "One single move and I send the next bullet through your heart."

Not a sound, not a movement, while the acrid smell of powder crept throughout the room. Every man stood tense and rigid, the two groups, like silent, motionless statues confronting each other across the body of Sarf's fallen henchman.

Then from outside, above the ceaseless beating of the rain, came a sound of many hoofs on the paved street below, and a loud, "Hall".

The door burst open and Captain O'Hearn entered, followed by two lieutenants. In his right hand he held a heavy army automatic, and his eyes beneath the dripping steetson took in that dramatic tableau.

Curtly he broke the silence. "This meeting is under arrest."

Abruptly Dick faced him. "By whose orders?"

"By order of the War Department. The Governor has notified Washington that if violence breaks out here the State authorities cannot cope with it. He has asked for the aid of Federal troops. Tonight Verde lies under martial law."

Bitterly Dick thrust the automatic back in its holster. He had failed. Sarf was still in control, more securely now than ever with the aid of these Federal forces. He laughed without mirth and looked at Sarf.

"So this, too, was all arranged." But O'Hearn's eyes had fallen to the prostrate man. "Who did that?"

Triumphantly Sarf pointed to Dick. "There is the murderer."

For a brief second O'Hearn hesitated, then said to Lowell, "You will go with me to the Post under arrest. The rest of you will be registered by the sergeant and released on your own recognizance. Keep the peace. This is mob violence."

Crossing the room, the officer laid his hand on Lowell's arm and turned they conferred together in low tones.

Light feet came running up the stairs, and through the open door Nora hurried to where Lowell and Barnes were standing.

"You can't let them take you," she whispered. "Without you the cause is lost, Dick. Quick, before my car is standing. The engine is still running. Stay here with Barnes on the floor, as one who ponders over troublesome problems. Suddenly his tall form gathered itself for action. With one quick stride he was at the window. I presume that O'Hearn turned he lapped into the darkness.

Sarf, too, had seen, and drawing his revolver, started after a mad man in pursuit. But as he passed Barnes the long leg of the editor flashed out and Sarf sprawled headlong on his face. Gun in hand, Barnes reached the window, and have Nora threw herself before him. Roughly he tried to tear her aside, but she clung with all the strength of desperation, first to the window sill, then to him, rendering his efforts helpless until a grinding of gears and the roar of a motor told him Dick's flight from Verde had begun.

Barnes and baffled O'Hearn turned on Nora. "Why did you do that?"

"To save you."

But happily and with eyes straight ahead Dick sped until until at him. "Pal", she answered, "if you only knew how attractive you look when you scowl in just that fashion."

Beneath the window Dick's feet had struck the soft, drenched lawn, and his mother bound he grasped the wheel of Nora's car. A figure behind revealed a platoon of cavalry standing in close formation at the corner, and as he threw the car into gear their confused shouts reached him above the violence of the storm. Without turning his head he skidded around the rain swept street, and throttle wide open, made for the desert road.

Hatless, beaten by rain and wind, he bent low over the steering wheel while about him screamed the ragging voice of the norther. Rapidly the lights of the town flashed by and fell behind, and now he was racing for the open desert. Once he glanced back, but no pursuing lights broke the black wall of night.

Those six miles to the ranch house made in almost as many minutes, and jamming on the brakes before his hacienda gate, Dick ran to the stable.

In the darkness ahead something gleamed, and Lolita, her straight black hair streaming with, led out the mare, already saddled.

"Gracias a Dios," she breathed, seeing him run toward her, then stopping, poised like two huge parcels and stuffed them in the saddle bags.

"These are food, Don Ricardo. The senorita Nora has told me. Is it that you will be away for many days?"

He drew her to the shelter of the barn. "Perhaps for many days, Lolita, may be answered. "And then men will be hunting me. No one you must have no fear. Some day I shall come back."

Quickly he ran to the ranch house picked up a hat, then snatched a poncho and heavy blanket from the closet. Passing through the living room he picked a rifle from the wall and thrust a handful of cartridges into his pocket. Then out again, and swinging into the saddle he bent down to Lolita, who stood looking up at him with wet, affrighted eyes.

"No one must know where I am going," he cautioned her. "None but you, Barnes and Nora, and to these alone you must say that tomorrow at sunset I shall be at the head of Cougar Creek."

Swiftly he rolled up the blanket and tied it behind him on the skirt of the saddle. His rifle he thrust into its scabbard, then reaching down, Dick took her up-turned face between both his hands.

"Se sol, sfrelh,ligtle Lolita," he told her in Spanish. "Not even when the Americano soldiers come. They will not harm you. Let them do as they-like here, but tell them only this: I have gone." Then his face hardened. "And if Sarf and his men seek you out, do not afraid. Say to him you are under my protection and if he lays the weight of his littlest finger on you I swear that a night comes when the debt-

CHAPTER THIRTY-TWO

With a start Lowell looked up. Far down the coast toward Verde the lights of two cars bumped and careened at a mad pace through the gloom, and already the dull rumble of their engines reached his ears. Cougar Creek, forward, grasped in his hand, pressed it against her lips. "Go, Go, for the love of Heaven! From me they will learn nothing".

Once more, perhaps for the last time, he raised his sombre eyes to look at that vine covered home, no longer a corner now, but a hated criminal, an outcast, a pariah among his kind.

Again in the very ecstasy of terror came the girl's agonized voice. "Go, Dick, go quickly."

Without a word he raised his bridle and rode slowly out to the little stream that ran behind the corral. There he stopped, and shielding his eyes from the rain, looked back toward the hacienda.

Two cars had drawn to a halt, and booted men were pounding up the steps. Flashlights glittered about the yard and in a momentary lull of the storm a sudden cry warned Dick they had found his tracks at last. A dozen lights were dotting the corral, and like dogs on a hot scent, they followed the mare's footprints in the wet sands. Still silent and silent, and always the still, unbroken tall form hidden by the blackness of night, the eyes fastened in bitter amusement on the frantic search of his pursuers at last, as if wearied with it all, he raised his open hand aloft in a mocking gesture of farewell, and as the storm increased the rain lashed mess.

Swinging roughly off the road, he headed straight for the Barrier, knowing that already his pursuers would be guarding the nearer approaches to the trail. Doubtless, too, Sarf had telephoned his men at Cougar dam to watch the farther side. He nodded in confirmation to his unspoken thought. It would be better to go around, to skirt the Barrier to the south and reach the foothills. Up there alone lay safety, for by tomorrow noon he would be entering shelter nor security within the desert country. Sarf would see to that. On he rode over the sodden sands. By slow degrees the rain ceased, although torn, dirtied clouds still swung moon rose, cold and cheerless, outlining in fains silver the rim of the Barrier. A car, far out on the desert, passed him, making for the lake. Solon or Sarf's men. Dick shrugged. What difference? Shielding the match, he lighted a cigarette, and in its glow saw it was nearing midnight. Six hours of darkness yet, and by then he would be well in the shelter of the pine-clad foothills. Once there, the advantage lay with him, for he had roamed these hills since childhood. He knew every trail, every stream, even to the wild, boulder strewn summits of the mountains beyond.

Hours passed. They skirted the base of the Barrier at a tireless trot, rider and horse with heads bowed against the bitter north wind, and soon they were climbing the stony bottom of a dry arroyo that led up to the foothills. Lowell stopped to rest the mare, and as she lowered her head to nibble at the sparse, hard clumps of grass, he peered back into the night.

"No more cats or barn, old girl. From now on it's going to be slim picking for us both." Then, with a warm flong of sheer animal well being, came the exultation that adversity and the nearness of danger always brought to him, and soon Dick found himself humming a cowboy song as again the mare clambered upward through the night.

By dawn he stood upon the summit of the first range of foothills, and in the shelter of a pinon grove dismounted, and loosening the saddle cinch, let the mare graze upon the winter grasses while he rested and smoked. For a moment that night behind him he felt no great desire for sleep. That could come later, farther back among the hills.

Resting, wrapped in contemplation, he sat there with another desert sunrise dawned and grew glamorous behind the eastern sky. Slowly the first faint pinks deepened to flame while, threadlike and feathery the clouds drifted out of the north until little by little, revealed as by the raising of successive veils, all the desert shimmered before him, sunspun and newly and freshly bathed in the first full rays of a new day. Tiny wisps of smoke were curling skyward from the dotted ranches, catlike moved from out dry water courses where they had found protection against the night wind, and Nature itself seemed very alive through the clear, keen air. Beneath him to the east gleamed the cool blue waters of Silver Lake, the rising walls of the dam, and scattered bunkhouses of the workmen. For a time Dick watched, happily forgetful that from now on he had no part here. Unconsciously he drew a deep breath. His world! Not such huge things as he did wrong, not a trail he had not traveled a hundred times, and this wild land stretched so peacefully beneath his eyes that he knew that from now on a pain almost physical in its sharp intensity piercing him, causing him to rub the back of hand and spring impatiently to his feet to shake off the intolerable burden of that thought.

Restlessly his eyes passed to the far horizon, then fixed on the long trail that led down the north ridge of the Barrier. Men were moving out there, urging their horses in single file along the steep descent, and now the morning sun cast back the reflected gleam of rifle barrels. The cavalry!

At least fifty soldiers Dick counted, then his eyes dropped to the work shacks about the lake. There, too, in the early morning men were hurrying to stables and corrals, escaping in a few moments later mounted and ready for the trail. The watching man smiled sweetly. The hosts of Sarf had lost little time in following out their master's wish. Now they were crowding about one rider who seemed to be issuing orders, and soon in broken, uneven ranks they moved forward along the base of the foothills, riding slowly, stopping frequently, as men who hunt for a message in the sand.

Freddie Bartholomew with a star cast of 65 players in "David Copperfield," coming to the Belle Saturday.

Dick grinned at his mare. They won't find many tracks, girl, will they? The old girl's nose blew too hard for that."

Rising, he stretched his tired muscles. In two hours these men would be where he now stood. It was time to be under shelter and gather up, and again a wave of rebellion gripped him. This, then, was to be his life—to be harried through the hills, to be stopped from ridge top to ridge top—to sleep, to eat, always on the alert, to be ever on guard until the day when the knocker the chase would end.

Weary at last from those two wakeful nights, Lowell climbed into the saddle and turned back toward the forest.

"After all," he said more to the mare than himself, "even outlaws must sleep." And in another moment he disappeared among the dark shadows of the pines.

Toward the end of that same day a lone rider sat his horse high up on the mountain side that bounded the headwaters of Cougar Creek. Half hidden among the stunted, windswept pines, the man's watchful eyes followed every movement in the darkening valley below, waiting for those restless eyes, he sat there motionless, a dim figure in the partial obscurity of the pines.

SPRINGBROOK COUPLE HONORED

Springbrook—On Friday evening, March 29th about one hundred and fifty neighbors and friends gathered in Orange Hall, Springbrook and held a real surprise party for Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Mumby, prior to their moving to Moira to reside. Mr. and Mrs. Mumby and family: Mrs. Mumby, Miss Jean Hicks read the following address:

Mr. and Mrs. Mumby and family We your friends and neighbors of Springbrook and surrounding neighborhood have met here tonight to spend a social hour with you ere you depart for your new home. During the time in our lives when we must be separated from our friends and it reminds us of the expression of Kipling:

"He who has a thousand friends has not a friend to spare."

It is with regret to us that the time has come for your departure from our midst; but we are pleased to know that you are not going to a strange land as we will be permitted to see you from time to time as you will be but a short distance and will not decrease but rather increase according to the adage what is out of sight makes the heart grow fonner." As neighbors we felt we could give you no higher expressing in some tangible form the many ways you will be missed in such as neighbors and friends. In token of our esteem and regard for you we ask you to accept these few articles as a reminder of the

No More Piles

Doctor's Prescription Does The Work

Few Pile sufferers know that the cause of Piles is internal—bad circulation of blood in the lower bowel.

This is the scientific truth about Piles—the real reason why salves and suppositories so often may not give lasting relief and why cutting sometimes removes the pile tumor but leaves the cause which may create a recurrence.

Your itching, bleeding or protruding Piles will only go when you actually remove the cause. For this an ingredient called Bio-Zyme Rid HEMROID, the prescription of Dr. J. S. Leonhardt, which by good druggists everywhere, succeeds because it stimulates the circulation, and acts to relieve congestion.

So isn't it better, when salves fail and before considering operation, to try this internal remedy when J. S. McKeown invites every Pile sufferer to try HEM-ROID with money-back if not joyfully satisfied with the help one bottle gives.

GOVERNMENT WON'T BUDGE

the yearly payments by Hydro for power it undertook to buy from the companies under the contracts Premier Mitchell of Hepburn proposes to cancel.

These annual payments by the Hydro would be approximately $14,000,000 by 1937, so the reduction in interest suggested by the committee, if accepted, would permit a reduction in the contract payments of more than $15,000,000.

Proposal Submitted

The committee's proposal, which will be submitted tomorrow to both the Government and the Quebec power companies, calls for the Hydro to continue to accept the power contracted for but at a possible reduction in the price of the bondholders as a whole should agree to accept the lower interest proposal.

In addition, the committee asks that the Government reciprocate by guaranteeing the bonds of the power companies.

London, April 4 (CP Cable)—A possible threat to Canada's credit was seen by financial editors of London's newspapers today, in the bill introduced in the Ontario Legislature to invalidate contracts of the Province's Hydro-Electric Power Commission with four Quebec power companies.

TORONTO, April 4.—(CP)—Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn said today he was willing to confer with Premier Taschereau of Quebec, if he asked for a conference respecting matters of interest to the two provinces.

The Quebec Premier announced last night he intended to meet Mr. Hepburn not only to discuss Ontario's action terminating Quebec power contracts but other matters as well.

Current Attractions at Local Theatres

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL

"The Night Is Young"

A Love Story With Music Starring Lovely Evelyn Laye With Ramon Novarro

Glamorous Vienna with its Imperial Opera, its haunting music and continental gayety of romance, is transferred to the screen in a haunting blend of music, drama, comedy and romance in "The Night Is Young," entrancing musical love story now playing at the Capitol Theatre.

Glorious music and beautiful settings are in interest with a piquant personality from the Old World, champagne blonde Evelyn Laye, who is co-starred with Ramon Novarro.

Beauty and a gorgeous voice are hers, in addition to an amazing personality and acting ability. Novarro, in handsome uniforms, sings better than ever in his career, and the haunting Viennese melodies contain many song hits.

Novarro plays a young archduke, commanded by the Emperor to marry a Countess. Miss Laye plays the role of a dancer in the Imperial opera whom he loves. Their romance, swayed by the stern dictates of royal etiquette, is the central theme. Amid it whimsical comedy abounds.

Edmund Everett Horton, as the Baron, Charles Butterworth as the chauffeur, Muriel Kirkland as Butterworth's sweetheart, and Herman Bing as the composer, lend performances in gales of laughter.

Song hits include "When I Grow Too Old To Dream," the romantic melody; the comical "Wiener Schnitzel"; "Good Night," duet sung by Butterworth, "The Night Is Young" and others.

Murphy directed with deft skill, and Donald Cook, Henry Stephenson, Charles Judels, Charles Judels, Albert Conti and others of note are in the cast of the spectacular romantically contrasted musical entertainment.

"Name the Woman"

"Name the Woman," the second attraction on this programme is a mile a minute newspaper romance featuring Richard Cromwell and Arline Judge and it's a sure cure for the let-down, dull feeling.

Young Cromwell is seen as a cub reporter, who is assigned to an unfavorable political murder story because no one else is around to cover the yarn, and gets more than complications to the film-foot than a normal man would in a lifetime.

How Cromwell gets his story and how the girl gets entangled makes And, a sequence in which he battles the villain in the rumble seat of an automobile speeding at a mile-a-minute clip on a mountain road at sixty miles an hour will give you a breathless thrill.

Cromwell is excellent as the cub reporter and Arline Judge, the girl he really starts keen on his newspaper pursuits, is a clever and charming lass, as is Lu Ray in the role of a "heavy" who helps Cromwell achieve his end, gives a splendid performance. Ann Page, as usual, makes an excellent villain and Charles Wilson and Thomas Jackson, as the city editor and star reporter, add convincing portrayals.

Middle aged picture fans will be glad to see Jack Wilson re-cut the long distance hero of the silent days, in the role of a candidate for mayor, who starts all the trouble. Others in the cast are Henry Conlon and Phillip Trent.

Capitol News Reel, showing scenes of many current events, and a short musical performance. Last complete show 8:50.

AT THE BELLE

"Misslssippi"

Crosby and Fields in New Musical Fun-Flooded Spectacle

The screen's leading exponents of song, comedy and beauty, Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields and Joan Bennett, respectively...vie for honors in Paramount's "Mississippi" the new and gala musical film now at the Belle Theatre, and come off in a glorious tie that makes the picture a flood of mirth and melody.

"Mississippi" is a story of Dixie in the days when the ladies wore crinolines and the gentlemen didn't enjoy their morning coffee unless it had been preceded by a julep. Into this colorful and somewhat dangerous country come Bing Crosby, a native youth from Philadelphia, to claim the hand of his lady, played by Gail Patrick. He won't deal with his rivals for the lady's affection, not because he is afraid, but because he thinks the custom ridiculous.

Crosby is branded coward by the others and goes off with Fields, the captain of a river steamer in order to escape the ridicule. Under the tutelage of the blustering old braggart Crosby develops into a fighting terror, billed all along the river as the singing terror.

Fields develops into a real comedian with Crosby discovering that Miss Bennett, the girl he left back but her little sister, Joan Bennett, all along. And she despises him for his cowardice. So Crosby keeps Fields have to go to work undoing the damage he has done to Crosby's reputation.

Crosby, who has shown definite talent as a comedian in his recent pictures, develops into a real partner with Fields, at the top of his form in "Mississippi." And Crosby's score, composed by Richard Rodgers and Lorenz Hart, is just a whole-full bit as is "She Loves Me Not" and "Here is My Heart."

The highpoint of the film is Crosby's singing of that grand old Stephen Foster melody "Swanee", with the assistance of a Negro chorus.

Queenie Smith, singing star of the Broadway stage, makes her debut in a supporting role of "Mississippi," Melody division is furnished by the Rhythm Boys, Harry Barris, who are features with Claude Gillingwater, Guinn Williams and Fred Kohler, appearing in the supporting dramatic roles.

"The March of Time"

The latest motion picture innovation, "The March of Time" on the screen, the new short subject which both movie professionals and fans have been talking about for a long with keen interest since it was announced that it would be shown at now on the Belle screen until Thursday.

Much of the interest in this new screen venture is due to the fact that it is the product of motion picture men but of a successful group of young editors. Seven years ago these men founded a new type of news magazine, TIME. Their great success with TIME, 900 has now grown to more than 200,000. Two years ago they started another magazine, FORTUNE, which despite the depression has already developed 50,000 subscribers at $10 a year. Four years ago they began a radio program, "The March of Time," in the National Radio Editor's Poll, this was voted the best educational program on the air. Now they offer "The March of Time" on the screen.

"The March of Time" on the screen is a twenty-minute presentation, dramatizing outstanding news events. The editor's call it a news film, but not a newsreel because it uses sound motion-pictures of the actual events and happenings as well as narrators, musical actors and superimposed sound. The presentation will be a combination of seven or eight interesting events, and fashion the story through from beginning to end.

"Tryland Premiere" a gorgeous and colorful color picture. A beautiful color plus an interesting topical reel are exhibited on the same program.

The entire program will be repeated again tomorrow, and Friday matinee and evening, and is recommended to all lovers of bright snappy springtime entertainment.

FAVORS FREE SEED FOR UNEMPLOYED

Council Will Decide on Seed And Garden Plots

Relief recipients and unemployed of the city will be given another chance this year to provide themselves with produce grown from their own gardens, it was stated by Mayor Geo. A. Thos.

"We're going to bring the question of free seed up at the next meeting of the Council," he said, "in the meantime we are asking a checkup of all free land available for garden plots. This will be listed and then apportioned out to the needy who have registered at the office of the city engineer for the Relief Mayor Thos. said.

"Last year we depended largely on the generosity of a number of citizens who provided vacant land for these garden plots, and this year owing to the fact that we do not expect to have enough vacant land to go around, we are going to ask them for the loan of the property to be used by the men."

At the present time the city engineer's department is making a canvas of vacant land in the city and will divide it up into lots for distribution among the applicants. All citizens who have such land are asked by Mayor Tice to telephone the office of the City Engineer or to call in person at the office, listing the property.

FELIX LATONE'S APPEAL ALLOWED

Judge Madden Hears Appeal Over Still Conviction

A successful appeal case was heard in the County Court held before Junior Judge Madden here yesterday when the appeal of Felix Latone, Foxboro, who had been previously convicted in police court of possession of an illicit still was allowed by Judge Madden. His counsel held that there was no sufficient evidence produced to identify the accused with having operated a still or having been in possession of forbidden illicit mash.

The appeal took the better part of two days, opening at the local Court House on Tuesday morning while the judgment was not delivered until the final evidence had been submitted late yesterday afternoon. The condition of the roadway leading to where the still was approved major argument brought by the defence, there being much coincidentory evidence in relationship as to the distance from town or dry.

Latone was convicted in police court held before Magistrate Clement a Tweed on Jan. 22nd last and fined for being in possession of a part of a still and mash, found in the bush at the west end of Tweed, but not on Latone's property. The case was investigated by the R. C. M. P. officers.

Mr. I. D. Corcoran, Tweed barrister, represented the defendant yesterday while R. D. Arnott was retained to present the Crown's side.

Daily Short Story

"THEY'RE OFF"

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

The Worthington colors have long since disappeared from racing annals. John Worthington still has horses but they're saddle horses, not racers. It is reived from that after Stumble won its last race.

Stumble's gone too. But there was a horse. It won its owner enough to retire on, winning almost every important handicap in America. That was a long time ago. John Worthington got Stumble as a yearling for a few hundred dollars, trained him and began racing him. He did well enough in his first year, on the track in his second he shot ahead and John began to realize that he had a real horse, an unbeatable one. Others began to realize it too.

Stumble was kept in an old stable on the Worthington place, heavily mortgaged and pretty much given to seed. Nancy Ferguson often rode over to exercise him and it was she who first warned John that Stumble ought to have some kind of a guard.

"Sam can take care of him," John answered, meaning the colored trainer, handle and general man of all work.

Urges Guard

"Joe can't do any such thing," answered Nancy. "Not that he would try. Joe thinks as much about that horse as you do. But what good would he be if somebody tried to kill it?"

"What do you mean?" asked John. "Why should anybody want to kill Stumble? Are you serious?"

"Are you serious?" replied Nancy. "Horses have been killed before this. That's the one sure way of making certain they won't win a race."

But John laughed at Nancy's warning. He did, however, warn Joe not to let any strangers approach the stable. "And give those other horses a rubdown," he added. "They look like plough horses." Stumble's playmates did as a matter of fact, get little or no attention from Joe.

Three days later John had to leave on a business trip. Nancy immediately took charge. The orders she gave Joe were considerable of a shock to him. But he obeyed them, knowing better than to argue or grumble about any orders issued by the young woman who was some day to marry the owner of Stumble.

For a while it looked like Nancy's fears had been groundless. Then the blow fell. Joe, sleeping on a cot in the stable, was awakened by a flashlight shining in his face. A voice said, "One peep out of you and you'll never peep again. Where's Stumble's stall?"

Trembling, hardly able to walk, Joe led three men to Stumble's stall. The horse, its coat shining like satin in the light, whinnied. The light flashed from it to its unfriendly companions in the adjoining stable.

Then came the roar of shots.

Story Is Told

And then the butt of a gun descended on Joe's head.

He was still unconscious when Nancy found him the next morning. It was some time before he was able to talk but she hardly needed his statement to understand what had happened.

John Worthington, came back that evening. Nancy met him at the station and told him. He stopped as stunned as though he too, had been blindfolded.

"I should have followed your advice," he said. "I will from now on. But I'll never have a horse nor half as good as Stumble."

"Oh, yes you will," answered Nancy. "You'll have a better horse —if you take care of him.

"I'll get better as he's fleeter."

She had intended waiting till they got to the stable to tell him. But he was so shaken by the news that she told him immediately.

"Wait a minute," she said, "I'll explain. "When you left I gave Joe some orders. He didn't want to carry them out but he did. He neglected Stumble, let his coat get dirty, put him in another stall and then polished up one of the other horses and put him in Stumble's stall. Those horse-killers fell for it. They killed the horse in Stumble's stall but it wasn't Stumble. Joe's working on him now polishing him up again. And after this you set a stable guard so that they won't come back when they learn about their mistake."

TARZAN THE UNTAMED—

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service)

Ahmed, son of the maharajah, was perplexed. Roger Cecil had sent word he was arriving tomorrow. Also (the thing that caused Ahmed to raise his eyebrows), he was bringing with him an English girl, hoping she, too, would be welcome.

This prince of India, cultured and Western-civilized by English schooling, was far removed from his ancestors, whose rites included "Suttecism," or the burying of widows with their deceased husbands, as well as the practice . . . of throwing infants into the sacred river Ganges. There was his fanatic father to be considered. He knew how his highness hated the conquering British and detested the presence of English women in his state.

Another thing caused Ahmed uneasiness, for the native state was recently consenting to throw off the British yoke. But he much desired to honor his friend, Cecil, who had once so bravely come to his rescue, and so he decided to accept the invitation.

Little Benny's Note Book

We was eating breakfist and ma said, If you're through with the cereal, Willyum, dont bother to pass it.

Do I hear the genile tones, or sourcasm? pop said, and ma said, Not at all, I was never more serious. I stepped on the scale around at the drugstore yastiddy and they revealed their fill tale story. In other words my weight is changing for the worse and its time I psychological to do a little fersi aid dieting, she said.

O, what's a few ounces between frendas? pop said. The more the merrier within certain limits of course, that's a way I feel about you, my deer. I'll go even ferther. I'll propose a toast, he said.

With he did, holding up his cup of coffee and saying:

Here's to much of a good thing's important,
Be here's to sverdupoise,
And here's to each new bump and curve,
Drink her down with a bullyed, boys!

And pop took 2 swallows of coffee and quick put the cup down again on account of it being too hot, and ma said, Thanks kindly but I'll stick to the same, but I'm not going to be a human elefant for any such sentimental reasons. Anyway, she carves, the ideer. I can propose a toast to you, too, she said.

With she did, saying:

Here's to the deer departed,
Here's to the waving hair
With use to float on yonder dome,
But alass it's no longer there.

With most of it aint, and pop said, Well, if you're going to get personal I'll fold up my newspaper like the Arabs and silently steal away.

With he did down to his office, and ma reached over and put a little creem in her coffee but not so much as usual.

"Too Grouchy to Live With"

Irritable, nervous, impossible

What do they really think of you
When you blow in after the day's work.
Are you greeted with a pleasant welcome
Or is there a deadly silence to meet your entry.
True there are burdens to bear these days
Which sap the vitality of mind and body.
Never was the nervous system so severely tried.
But why take it out of your family?
When your nerves are upset,
There is always effective relief obtainable
In the form of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.
Your wife knows about this treatment
Or if not she is an exception
For everywhere women are talking about it.
It is just as effective for men
For it actually forms rich, red blood
And restores nerve force to the tired body.

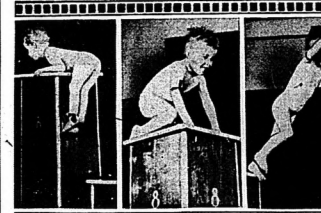
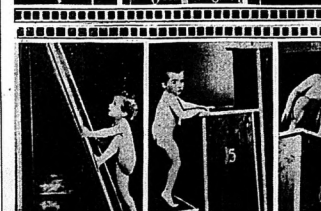
"Conditioned" Boy Outstrips "Normal" Twin





Yesterday, remarkable pictures of 16-month-old girl twins were shown in these pages. One set showed a "conditioned" girl and the other a "normal" child. And here are Jimmy and Johnny, now 2 years old, the twins who were the forerunners of Florrie and Margie in the child development experiment of Columbia University Medical centre. Johnny, the "conditioned," trained twin, brings a stool from the other side of the room, to climb atop a stand, which he mounts unaided and jumps without fear into the arms of the waiting nurse. But Jimmy, normally reared twin, has to have a better ladder to mount the stand which he does not instantly, and once atop the stand is afraid to jump. This is only one of scores of experiments worked out by the psychologists, philosophers and scientists of the institute to determine the advantages of child training from birth.—Photos by Samuel Shere. # BRITISH COMMONS HEARS OF HEPBURN POLICY

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES

New York, April 5 (CP)—Your headache? Then there's much ado in your restricted blood vessels within the brain concentrated in the spinal canal.

Science has ascertained Dr. Frederick Tilney told the New York Academy of Medicine last night.

Headaches are apt to occur when blood leaks into the tubes and lateral of these little spaces.

Hypersensitive persons may derive a headache from consuming milk or eggs, sugar and other foods, Dr. Alexander Lambert told the symposium. Excessive smoking may bring pain "to another 5-cent person," and a headache from coffee; others may use coffee to cure the same ill.

Berlin, April 5 (CP)—Phoenix-like, German cities of the future will rise out of ashes—or rubber, asbestos—scientific circles assert.

Gerhard Graubner says it is to proceed to produce a building material having the elasticity of felt, the solidity of wood, the noncombustibility of cork and the non-inflammability of asbestos, it was asserted by German professors.

Laurence, Kas., April 5 (CP)—The question closest to the heart of every college man became a concert dance—what is a stag dance to guaranteed freedom of the feet?

Joe Sutton insists he is a man's man who wants to go to dances and not choose his own partners where he may. He filed suit against the dance committee of the University of Kansas because he was left out of seats a stag at each of three dances. Saying his activity ticket specified free admission to the sale for his 20 cents back, plus $5 for breach of promise.

Mansfield, O.—(AP)—Mrs. Steve Kelser died today of pneumonia after "like a year" agony, especially while the radio played "Home Sweet Home" during her last moments.

Mrs. Kelser said she discovered the money when she investigated sounds coming from a woodpeck in the house. She killed it in a cage where it now "sings" daily.

Medelia, La., April 5 (CP) — Two bandits who lost $4.50 trying to hold up the bank of Robeline were back today, Wallace Hall said, into the bank they asked George Hall to change a $20 bill, then pointed a pistol at him. English stepped back on a burglar alarm. It did some ringing. The pair of men fled with only 50 cents of their change.

British Mission Results Show Germany Against New Pact

By GEORGE HAMBLETON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, April 5 (CP Cable)—Delayed by storms and indisposition, Anthony Eden arrives home tonight with the final report on Britain's mission of peace to Germany, Russia, Poland and Czechoslovakia.

The full Cabinet meeting scheduled for today was postponed to Monday because of the change in Mr. Lord Privy Seal's plans.

The results of the British mission can be summed up, and in the main they are. Germany remains opposed to a fresh settlement based generally on the basis of the Anglo-French accord drawn up at London, February 3. Stresa may clarify the attitude of the old triple entente but Germany remains a question mark.

French Troops Move

Paris, April 5 (CP)—Military and diplomatic activities to preserve the peace of Europe and guarantee French security went forward side by side in France today.

Massing of the Franco-German border to ward off any surprise attack progressed as 72,000 picked troops were moved up to the frontier.

The Quai D'Orsay experts were drafting a tentative European mutual assistance pact and proposals for the united front of France, Great Britain and Italy which Foreign Minister Pierre Laval will present at the tri-power conference at Stresa next week.

CAMPAIGN FOR NEW ART GALLERY FOR CANADA

A move is on foot in many parts of Canada to campaign for a new National Art Gallery for Canada. Those favoring such a project point out that the present building and facilities in Ottawa are hopelessly inadequate to meet the needs of an ever-growing interest in art. At present the government appropriates $25,000 annually for the art gallery. Lagrel ABOVE shows the present National Art Gallery and an interior scene.

Murder Count Upset by Lords

London, April 5 (CP)—The House of Lords, highest tribunal in Great Britain, today, for the first time in history, quashed a murder indictment against a condemned man.

Reginald Woolmington, 21, a Dorset farm hand, will be released before been found guilty of murdering his 19-year-old wife, Kathleen, with a sawed-off shotgun.

The original trial in the Somerset Assizes, the jury disagreed, the Bristol Assizes, Woolmington sentenced to hang. The appealed but the Court of Appeal sustained the Bristol verdict.

T. J. O'Connor, K.C., his attorney, succeeded in having the Appeal Court refer the case to the Lords on the ground that legal points of importance had been involved in the course of previous hearings and the case was taken before the House of Lords yesterday.

O'Connor told the Peers he believed the jury at Bristol had misdirected the jury.

The only other murder case ever heard by the House of Lords was 16 years ago.

The Japanese are leaving no stones unturned in their expansion of major world projects. Already potential dominating factors in Africa, Abyssinia in particular, their new merchant marine fleet, the finest naval reserve in the world, is speedily dominating Pacific Ocean shipping. Above is one of six new luxury liners being built by Japan; a fleet of fifty freighters which travel at speeds of more than 20 miles per hour, span Tokio to San Francisco in 11 days with rich cargoes of silk. This constitutes a tremendous saving in time and dollars.

BRITISH SEEK OUT FOREIGN BODIES

Deaths of Anti-Nazi Women Stirs up Country

LONDON, April 5.—(CP-Havas) The Government was urged to take drastic steps to investigate political societies operating secretly in England today as police investigated the deaths of two anti-Nazi women emigres for possible connection with the Zakro case.

The request for action was made in the House of Commons by Capt. C. Waterhouse, Conservative, following the discovery yesterday of the two women dead from poison in their apartment in Bloomsbury. The two were said to have been prominent anti-Nazi workers and the police inquiry is being directed toward finding any possible link with the alleged kidnapping of Berthold Jakob, German exile, in Basel, Switzerland, by Nazis.

Waterhouse asked as to the significance of the deaths. He was answered by Sidney Abercrombie of the Home Department. H. F. C. Crookshank who declared the discovery would be referred by the usual coroner's inquest.

Girl is Sentenced on Bigamy Count

Windsor, Ont., April 5—(CP)—Marjorie Georgina Gram Markham Pennington, who deserted her first husband because she "didn't love him any more" and remarried, was sentenced to six months determinate and one year indeterminate in Mercer Reformatory, Toronto, in Magistrate's Court today.

Little more than a week ago the slim, blue-eyed girl, who was born in Chatham 21 years ago, walked into Windsor police headquarters and confessed to bigamy. Officials at the county jail "called the

Little Girl Swallows Piece of Thermometer

Goderich, Ont., April 5—(CP) — Little Eleanor Wark, three-and-a-half-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norman K. Wark, has developed a mania for swallowing things. The latest addition to her strange diet was a piece of a thermometer. In the last few months she has swallowed about 20 cents in small coins, also a paper clip and a large safety pin.

Mrs. Schorr Goes Home Travels by Bus Westward

California Friend of Vermilyea Family Says Harold Seems to Feel Better Since Family and Business Arrangements Have Been Made

As quietly and unassumingly as she arrived in the city on the afternoon of March 21st last, Mrs. "Jack" Schorr, who has been a twice daily visitor to the condemned cell of her former California friend, Harold W. Vermilyea, lodged in the Hastings County jail under sentence of death by hanging on May 2nd next, left the city by bus early last evening for her Ontario, California, home.

Maintaining the same sphinx-like silence and secrecy that has surrounded her every movement since her arrival here two weeks ago in an attempt to avoid undue publicity, Mrs. Schorr was uncommunicative to the last.

"I've been treated wonderfully well in your city, and I want to thank everybody for being so kind, especially Conservative French and officials at the county jail" chided the quietly garbed Californian in an exclusive interview with a Daily Ontario Intelligencer reporter just previous to boarding the bus at a downtown stop.

"No, there is nothing I can say—nothing that I haven't already said," she replied to the many questions asked.

"I came to see Harold, and naturally I was glad to see him. But our conversations were limited to purely business and family matters. Harold was anxious that some disposition of his two children and the California estate be made. I believe an agreement has been reached on both questions."

The ninety-five pound widow in an attempt to escape the barrage of cameramen and newspaper reporters slung her line of route well above the waist, and after five hours of suffering in the chilly waters as he held to the side of their overturned boat.

BRITISH CONCERN ON POWER ACTION VOICED BY GOV'T

Hon. E. N. Rhodes Says Situation is Very Serious

REDUCTION FORECAST

Hepburn Says Matter is Purely One For Province since

London, April 5 (CP Cable)—The British government will draw the attention of the Canadian government to the concern expressed here following the introduction of a bill in the Ontario Legislature, largely to invalidate contracts between the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission and four Quebec Power Companies.

Dominion Disallowance

Ottawa, April 5 (CP)—Of interest because of the conclusions as to whether the Dominion will exercise powers of disallowance of the Ontario Bill declaring Hydro contracts with four private Quebec Power Companies, D. J. Dowie (Con., Port Arthur-Thunder Bay) today placed on the order paper of the House of Commons.

Ottawa, April 5 (CP)—Ontario's Hydro Electric legislation aimed against certain Montreal power producers creates a situation too serious to be commented upon without grave and damaging effect, Rt. Hon. E. N. Rhodes said today. Some statement may come later.

Mr. Rhodes was shown a cable from London in which Dominions Secretary J. H. Thomas was quoted as promising a questioner in the British House of Commons to draw the attention of the Canadian government the concern expressed in England over Ontario's Hydro legislation.

Hepburn's Retort

Toronto, April 5 (CP)—Action regarding Quebec Power purchase contracts was purely a matter for Ontario to decide for herself," said Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn today following a speech from London the British government would draw the attention of the Canadian government to the concern expressed in Great Britain following introduction of the bill here to validate the contracts.

The London despatch said financial commentators in London declared the bill would not affect Canadian credit but Mr. Hepburn declared that Ontario's credit is not at stake. We are not repudiating any contracts void and illegal."

Premier Hepburn said friends of the power companies affected by the legislation announced intention of terminating the contracts was not guaranteed by the Provincial government. "There is no foundation for it."

"Even if the act be disallowed, the power companies cannot make us pay," continued the Premier. "The act was unnecessary in that respect. It was declaratory merely."

Sir Waldron Smithers had said Prime Minister R. B. Bennett was expected to have described Ontario's action as "three-faced robbery." Premier Hepburn declared Mr. Bennett said no such thing.

Robbers Take Full Command Of Crack Train

Kankakee, Ill. April 5.—(AP)—Four swashbuckling "two-gun" bandits dressed cowboy style held up nearly forty persons aboard the crack gulf-coast bound Illinois Central train, the "Louisiana" we sought in wide-spread man-hunt today. They looted safes, escaped with $843, railroad reports said.

Terrorizing passengers aboard the train in a reign of terror, cowing those aboard for some 20 minutes while the train sped through the Chicago last night, the gunmen, each armed with two .45 calibre pistols, escaped after shooting and disabling the engineer and conductor, steering the automobile of Edward Goetzler, 26, of Wheaton, Ill., whom they kidnapped.

The wounded man was George Kerr, salesman from Chicago, shot in the leg, when he resisted the bandits' demand for his wallet, which contained $40. He was ordered to surrender the money, but the punctured wallet was returned.

Firing wildly several times to put the fear of death into their victims, the gunmen carried out the raid with the precision of a typical Chicago gang of hijackers. Before boarding the brakeman and porter, two of the bandits, posing as passengers in the buffet car and three others, in the smoker, were believed to have boarded the train in a Chicago suburb.

VETERAN MASTER CREATES RECORD

Retirement Ends Forty-Six Years of Sea Service

Victoria—A record for sea service in Pacific coastal waters ended with the retirement of Captain Robert Hunter, veteran shipmaster of the British Columbian coast, when he made his first craft in these waters in 1889 in crude side-wheeler.

From a shore-side bungalow here the veteran captain, looked back upon 46 years of service with the Canadian Pacific Navigation Company and served on the coastal steamers and such well-known old vessels as the S. F. Hibbard and the Yosemite. His last command was the old liner Princess Margaret.

Captain Hunter took out his first officer's papers in 1901 and two years later was given his first command. He has served on the bridge of practically every "Princess" steamer in local waters.

Born in the Shetland Islands, Captain Hunter came to Canada and the west when a young boy. Of late years he has commanded the triangle run between Victoria, Vancouver and Seattle.

MRS. SCHORR RETURNS HOME

she was constantly pegged at bus stops by enquiring reporters and cameramen, but she refused to give name. She will adopt the same system on her return.

During her stay in Belleville, Mrs. Schorr took advantage of the opportunity every day to visit the Dionnes in the cell block where he is confined. Secretly and cleverly each morning, and again at three o'clock, she was escorted to the cell corridor by police officials. Here seated on a chair some ten feet from the barred cell door, and within hearing of the guards, she conversed with the prisoner. On a few occasions Vermilyea was liberated from the cell to the corridor where both sat on chairs at a lengthened distance and talked. The conversation was mostly in regard to Vermilyea's children, Aurelia, 19, and Ross, 15, who live in North California. Both children were reported to have been very fond of Mrs. Schorr, being a friend of the family.

During her stay in the city, Mrs. Schorr gained four pounds in weight.

"It's Belleville's very much," she said with a ready smile. "Somehow it reminds me of my own little city of Orlando. The weather you know has been having for the last day or so been typically California spring weather."

Of Vermilyea, Mrs. Schorr would say little. But, she admitted, "I noticed little change in him since I met him last time, other than that he seemed to be under considerable mental strain. He worried a lot, mostly, about the children. He was very anxious that some provision be made regarding them. I believe he feels better now that he has had the opportunity to make some sort of arrangement. And he can be sure that I'll carry out his wishes to him."

Through numerous friends made during her brief stay, Mrs. Schorr will be kept advised of future developments in regard to Vermilyea. She appeared slightly buoyed by the prospect of returning to Belleville to the city within the next week or so for the purpose of further examining the prisoner mentally.

Railroads, Farm Mortgages Etc.

The Editor of Ontario Intelligencer:
Dear Sir:

After reading your article on unsigned letters in a recent issue I make bold to again take the time trusting you to find space. I see the railroad question is still open for discussion and Dr. J. C. Elliott still chief debater. He puts me in mind of the people near Lake Simcoe of when he said "Their eyes They Have Closed" for there is none so blind as them that will not see. No, I don't claim that we own the C.P.R. but I do claim that we have paid enough for it that we should be owning it and what I said was, 'Might not we justly claim it to be our own road." Now I happen to be living at the south side of the hill and about a stone throw from the C.P.R. and its 32 miles over the hill to the C.N.R. so according to LaRue I must ship my hogs C.N.R. and I've had two trucks so I'll just put a rope on each pig's leg and let the C.P.R. engineers and conductors that La-Rue's plan would put out of work I'll drive them in for free.

The farmers in the west living miles from the C.P.R. say if they can't have two roads running north and west through the west they will have several roads north, and south so his plan will create a demand for railroads in every one it solves. In his letter of March 19th, he says action on the C.N.R. (that we have to operate it in order to save Canada from going bankrupt) is again on the C.N.R. were to go out of business Canada would be bankrupt before the next day Capt. Innes speaking to the Rivards Club said if we continued to operate it to the limit, a $100,000,000 yearly deficit we would go bankrupt. Mr. Now confusing Capt. Innes says to let the C.P.R. operate it and us own it to save the $100,000,000 yearly deficit and that will cut out the income tax.

Now I understand the operating deficit to be a million dollars a week roughly speaking and to add another million weekly would for interest—on the $1,750,000,000 debt that this road has piled up on us so will you tell me how we can save this big million, by transferring and owning this road but letting the C.P.R. operate it, or how that will save much of the operating deficit either. Oh, dear I guess I'd better go to the asylum, yet the pump is still giving bad water.

Now Mr. LaRue in my opinion E. Schuster said more in four lines than both these men would if they had written a book on the subject this is it.

Two way trading between Canada and the United Kingdom and between Canada and the United States is the only way to prosperity."

Put out the income tax and the Dominion government going before the people with a platform of social security and cry it to keep as many as possible of these men in coalition government rather than allow them to come to the public for sentence.

Last year Canadian companies paid $350,000,000 in dividends. What dividends did Canadian farms pay?

What surplus did Canadian unorganized labor add to their saving account? Out of the income tax? What bank. Of course it could be made up by putting a large stamp on a note now and then and the hogs go to a loan at the bank to pay his taxes and the borrower pays the bill.

"How hardly shall they which have riches enter into the Kingdom of God." If Bennett is sincere in his promise to reduce the surplus this $60 millions and pay off half of Canada's farm mortgages that would make a saving of $400,000,000. The Stevens probe showed how much of this money was made and it would be going back where it belonged or let the government print $770,000,000 more for that purpose on the strength of our accumulating gold at its enhanced price. It would take the kink out of the farmers back, release more of this money at a similar business and give employment, and start a real industrial movement strong enough to start this labor class a-moving.

No Sir, Mr. Editor, we don't want a combination political government, what we want is a Co-operative government at Ottawa with about 20 persons as cabinet members at present and let them appoint a business executive of five members in each province as an "I dare" selections first and then let the government submit any action. One business man, one farmer, one laborer, one professional man and a lawyer. They would remove political patronage and leave the governing body free to act for the people as a whole. Let the Senate for why should all those old political and Party politicians be pensioned off in this way at such a tremendous expense to the public. The railway pension fund is just as silly. The more money a man made in life the more pension he draws. If the road was paying its way it would be different but as the common people pay it through every conceivable means of taxation that can reach a man of poverty. Oh, yes a farmer can get relief because he has income or means of support he will get 5 per month and if he has a roof over his head he can appeal to the first charge against the property. Not so the railroad pension.

No, Mr. LaRue your plan won't work for its no solution to Canada's present problem, whether or you see it or not regardless of party views if the C.P.R. is Canada's road and the employment of thousands of men, for many thousands of employees and the means to her hundreds of thousands of farmers of her many markets, the people of Canada will have to pay for likely they are only laughing at you. Why I don't sign my name.

So now Mr. Editor we have the budget laid down and there is a marked change in taxation is the tax on gasoline is 3c Excise Tax on liquor per gallon, so when our Dominion subsidies are abolished that its no longer safe to think we can find refuge in the devils soothing syrup might cheapen now. The pathos of it all. What a blow to our children, our wives, at our legitimate business conditions, our educational system, our railroads, our unemployment problem, the morale of our people and last but not least what a slap in the face for our churches. Well perhaps a few such slaps might bring them too but at least we'll have peace for a long time now. I read your article in the Globe and in my humble opinion its not curiosity that's causing people to tramp from one church to another but real soul hunger. They are looking for some sympathetic loving fellowship and are asking for living bread and are getting a stone. The church is taken up with finances till it can no longer say "Silver and gold have I none" and neither can it say "Rise up And Walk." Its feet simply can't understand why the minimum salary is not forthcoming though they admit to buying five hogs from their farmers at 5c the lowest a year ago. Oh, well, Nero fiddled while Rome burned, Brace your feet for the dumps boys.

Yours truly,
Side Hill Sam.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor of
The Belleville Ontario Intelligencer and the Merchants of Belleville:

I am writing this in the interest to save the people of Belleville from one of the greatest and meanest shams in the line since the Roman knights, or publicans as they were commonly called, had to be so wise. I should get the contract to collect the taxes. We may get some comfort in realizing that practically every town or city in Canada harbours the same sort of insanity, which goes by the name of "business". However, what is really probable is that in every city a little co-operation would stop this altogether.

What I refer to particularly, is the way the ladies' and men's clothing business is being conducted at present. Owing to the depression, our clothing merchants are allowing their small, high priced goods at fair, wholesale prices and sold them at prices which gave them a good profit and enabled them to make a living and save something for a rainy day, but instead come into the ladies' wear store, pick out a coat or dress with very little fuss; try it on, buy it if it suits, take it home, perfectly satisfied. She knew perfectly well that every merchant in Belleville expected to sell at a profit, and so, if she couldn't afford to buy, she politely would buy something not quite so good, for instance, she knew she could get the same quality of goods sold at no cheaper price. Everything was peaceful, but to-day I met a friend who told me of a merchant and everything was pointed and human.

Then it happened that some person thought of a new method of selling goods. Not a new one, but one which would come in and, when told the price of something, say that he could get it cheaper at the other new store; and, if the merchant wished to meet the price, he had to lower its price to meet the other's price. The customers of Belleville are caught on to the new method of procedure. They demanded low prices, or they would buy at the new store And they got their reduced prices. From a peaceful merchant was suddenly thrown to a battlefield Every clothing merchant was at daggers drawn with every other one, and, in accordance with modern methods of warfare, nothing was forbidden. In general, this resulted in the bankruptcy of all. The merchants stopped making a living; wholesale workers became slaves with the pay of a starvation minimum wage laws were evaded, and salaries were lowered to starvation. Yet, for the prices there was no such "rock-bottom"; these continued to remain at a fair and level. Every merchant fought, all in self-defence, and all the time were going to get his lower than those of the other.

Yet there was no help for it. It had to be done. All were cutting their own throats, yet for fear his own would stop, for fear his own throat would be cut. Accordingly we got a depression. Still with a bit of optimism, a merchant goes to the north to Montreal, but before the beginning of the season and immediately before the new season. Hopefully he marks them with a price that will enable him to pay his rent, his taxes, his bill, his taxes, and still leave a profit for himself and his wife and family. Then all the other stores bring their prices down and what does he do? He stores; they do theirs, and so it goes on. What else can any of them do? If they try to make a profit, no one buys from them, yet all the while they have to pay rent, lighting and taxes. On the other hand, when they lower their prices, children, and wives, at our legitimate business conditions, educational system, our railroads, unemployment problem, the morale of our people and last but not least what a slap in the face for our churches. Well perhaps a few such slaps might bring them too but at least we'll have peace for a long time now. I read your article in the Globe and in my humble opinion its not curiosity that's causing people to tramp from one church to another but real soul hunger. They are looking for some sympathetic loving fellowship and are asking for living bread and are getting a stone. The church is taken up with finances till it can no longer say "Silver and gold have I none" and neither can it say "Rise up And Walk." Its feet simply can't understand why the minimum salary is not forthcoming though they admit to buying five hogs from their farmers at 5c the lowest a year ago. Oh, well, Nero fiddled while Rome burned, Brace your feet for the dumps boys.

Yours truly,
Side Hill Sam.

CREDITABLE SHOWING

Those who read the statement in the Ontario Government budget speech on Tuesday showing the cost of the various towns and cities of the province for relief, must feel proud indeed also fortunate that Belleville is not in the position of some of the cities which expanded at a fast rate and now have to lean heavily on the Governments of Canada and Ontario for help in meeting the pressing burden of relief.

Belleville cost the Province in 1934 the amount of $23,440.67 which means that the cost to the city and the cost to the federal government for relief here were like amounts.

Direct relief in Belleville was the lowest for the cities, except Woodstock which with a population of 11,895 cost the province $13,021.14 while Belleville has a population of 13,790 according to the last federal census. Kingston's relief bill cost Ontario over one hundred and seven thousand dollars.

Among the towns, Trenton cost Ontario $60,163.15; Cobourg, $8,385.41; Deseronto, $21,418.56; and Napanee, $4,426.58; Picton, $10,414.29.

Led by Woodstock, Belleville had an enviable record among cities showing that there has been wise management and in the "boom days" there was not the extravagance which marks some other cities. Belleville also escaped the penalty of size for size drawn the crowds and when times became hard the burden is rendered too heavy.

Belleville is, however, paying through the provincial and federal grants to relief through the country's good share beyond what she is paying herself on relief.

Those who are on relief here must know that those who have to bear the load appreciate that relief costs are not what they are in some places.

SWEEPS WINNINGS AND WHAT!

All that glistens or glitters is not gold. Neither do sweeps winners all have the happy time they would seem to have. In an article by Tom Cassidy in the New York News, the story is told of sweep winners of yesteryear. "Some of the joint winners don't speak as they pass by," he says. Almost all sought leisure by road or sea. Fred Krakenberg, a postman of Queens, New York, who won $54,000 on Colombo in June, 1934, Irish sweeps, married the girl he had waited to marry and still follows his beat. "No retirement for me.... No golf ball for me. I'm going to hold on," he says. Winners of $108,000 in March sweeps in 1934 are vacationing. Valerio Zerbo, who won $42,000 in the Irish sweeps took a long tour in Italy with wife and family, returned, entered business and one of his sons is earning $20,000 a year as an artist, thanks largely to the travels. Sam Rosen had a long battle with beggars, con men and gyps, helped friends and is still a printer. "I hope I never have to go through such things again," he said. "I was on such a toilet list from here to China. I never want to hear about it again." A waitress drew $50,000 last April and left for Germany with her husband and did not come back. One winner went into hiding after returning to the United States after threats of kidnapping. She won $150,000. Some sweep winners depart leaving no trace. Two Brooklyn young men went to court and then dropped from view, one of them later being captured into jail recently as unable to pay a fine of fifty dollars and costs.

Many other people are happy besides those who hold the winning tickets. The sweepstake costs many a person money but only the few reap the spoils. Are the spoils worth bothering with? Do they make one change his or her life for the worse? Is there any greater happiness?

Everyone knows the person who makes the usual more or less successful achievement of life. Every town, city, is full of them. They are the people who make the cities and towns and civilization. They are not sweepstakes winners. Civilization cannot live on mere winners of sweeps.

BOW TIES AND GAS MASKS

Sufficient time has elapsed since the last war again to work up the g'amor of military dress. Veteran soldiers have no illusions about it, but dressing up in bright clothes may be an alluring break in the daily routine where color is otherwise lacking. The fraud about it is that behind the gay apparel of military parade occasions is the grimming skull of the human slaughterhouse. It is very romantic to attend social functions in "mess dress or blue undress uniforms," but when the glamorous clothes are stripped off, war's embrace is found to be foul and filthy.

The parade of a battalion of men in gas masks on Parliament Hill would perhaps inspire members of the House of Commons to find out the meaning of Senator Meighen's recent statement in the Senate as follows:

"Are we to say we will not join with France and Britain to turn back the march of the enemy on the banks of the Marne, and will only let our boys go if they want to go?"

When the older people in Canada again apply conscription to the younger men, let it be done with less gala sentiment. There is nothing in common between iron rations and bow ties. The gas mask is the truer symbol.—Ottawa Citizen.

A SUCCESSFUL DEMOCRACY

There are many things in a free country that annoy us at times like, and there always will be as long as men are free. Do not make any mistake. If democracy is going to survive and live it can only live by its own endeavours. Therefore today, as ever since the war, as I have preached till people must be sick of hearing me, you cannot have a successful democracy until every man and woman in the country realizes his and her responsibility for the conduct of that democracy. It is a high demand—far easier to set back, and do what you are told and not think.—Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin.

AIDS LARGER CITIES

Woodstock's receipts last fiscal year from the province for unemployment relief were not only smaller than those of any other city, as shown by statistics in the budget speech Tuesday, but smaller even in proportion to population. Taking for purposes of uniformity the population totals in the 1933 report of the department of municipal affairs, the $13,021 paid to this city was about $1.08 per capita. Another municipality somewhat near that figure was Chatham, at $3.60 per head of population. The ratio for Welland, a city of similar population, was $6.07 per head, for Toronto, $9.40, for Niagara Falls $33 and so on.

Had Woodstock received aid on the same basis as Woodstock, it would have got $78,000, not $2,110,522. Brantford's share would have been $36,000, not $171,430.

Had Woodstock, on the other hand, received assistance on the same scale as East Windsor it would have spent not $13,000 of provincial funds, but $274,000 or twice the amount it raises in a year for all purposes.

Of course, the payments were based, not on population, but unemployment needs. Woodstock could well be satisfied that its needs were no greater, and let it go at that but for one thing. The provincial money, not called, is raised by taxation. True, most of the relief money, has been borrowed in the past, but even in that case the interest, and in due course the principal, must be met by taxation. Now Mr. Hepburn is putting relief expenditure in ordinary account, and announces that it will be met by additional taxation.

The chief source of provincial revenue at present is motor taxation—one-third of the total. Next is taxation through the treasurer's department—corporation tax, succession duties, amusement tax, land transfers, etc. Through all the principal channels Woodstock contributes its fair share. In gasoline tax alone its citizens contribute in a year at least twice as much as the province paid back last year for unemployment relief. Allowing for all the other forms of provincial taxation, it is evident that this city pays into the treasury of Ontario far more than it gets back; and it is quite evident that a great many cities do not. In other words, this small city is supplying some of the funds paid to larger municipalities.

We are not saying that conditions improve in these other urban centres before the Legislature holds its special fall session to impose new taxation.—Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

INVENTIONS

It is interesting, in this connection, to read that, contrary to general opinion, invention has been slowing up in most countries. Dr. S. C. Gilfillan reports, in the Journal of the Patent Office of the United States, that for the past few decades, no only in that country but throughout the world, the number of applications has declined in proportion to the growth of population, in spite of the fact that the addition to the ranks of trained technicians has been so great. He is unable to account for the falling-off, though he mentions several factors. Standardization is one; fixed capital and the durability of material used are others. He even wonders whether the "native ability of the American people has been declining." More probable it is that inventors, especially in recent years, have not had the necessary financial backing to patent their novelties. There has been plenty of leisure to think out new processes, but less incentive or ability to perfect them.

There is certainly no lack of inventive ability in the world and the evidences of successful application of that ability to the practical problems of industrial and social life are innumerable. It would certainly be hasty—and erroneous— to conclude that the really important discoveries had all been made. New methods will continue to render old ones obsolete as long as the spirit of progress prevails. Humanity must go forward or backward. The machine age, with all its faults and blessings, cannot be wished or taked out of existence. The problem is to make the necessary adjustments to meet the improved conditions the machine makes possible.—Hamilton Spectator.

MOONFLOWERS

We used to watch on silver nights
Pale moonflowers suddenly illume
The darkness, till they seemed to be
White faces smiling in the gloom.

These were high moments for each one
Of us who watched them flowering.
White moments filled with loving thought
Of faith and beauty and the Spring.'

But now I dare not venture forth
When moonflowers by the wind are blown
In rhythmic grace. I cannot brave
Their fragile loveliness alone!

PARKING ON BUSINESS STREETS in Belleville is always a vexed question. Some folks want parking regulated to half hour sessions, others to an hour—that is no car to be permitted to occupy a parking position longer than half an hour or one hour. Others say that without parking restrictions folks are more likely to come to town to trade. The Retail Merchants' Association think that plenty of parking space can be created adjacent to but not on the business streets, so that these streets can be made availab'e for out-of-town folks who come to trade. It is a fact that motorists from out-of-town, have come to Belleville on occasion and after failing to find a convenient parking place in the centre of the city have motored to nearby towns to do their trading. Members of the Merchants' Association admit that many of the cars parked more or less permanently on the business streets in good convenient positions are owned by local citizens, who would be glad to co-operate if parking places were provided at the rear of the stores where there is much waste space which could be utilized. The Merchants' Association will ask the Council to have a survey made by the City Engineer of suitable parking place prospects and bring in a report.

ANDREW BAHR, seventy years old, who recently finished about the queerest and hardest job in the world, arrived by airplane recently at Edmonton, enroute to Seattle, his wife and family, after an absence of five years. Andrew Bahr is a reindeer herder and what he does not know about these critters just isn't to be known. Five years ago he contracted with the Canadian government to drive 5,000 reindeer from Alaska 1,800 miles to the new reindeer reserve, east of the Mackenzie delta, to a country where the Eskimos were starving. He completed the job not long ago, driving the herd which had dwindled to about 3,000, across the ice of the Mackenzie River to the promised land, there to be eagerly welcomed by the Eskimos, whose natural food supplies having failed were in sore straits. The herd of reindeer with natural increase will be kept up to strength and form a perpetual food and clothing supply. Bahr returns to Seattle to find his modest fortune of pre-depression days swept away. Two apartment buildings, formerly well rented, have been practically wiped out. However, he will be given a big civic reception by Seattle citizens and Andrew Bahr will be the first citizen for a time. His five years in the wilderness fighting fifty below zero, wolves, and driving blizzards have left him stooped, slightly deaf and not very talkative, his speech being unintentionally interlarded with Eskimo words, Norwegian and other languages. Five years, day and night, keeping a herd of 5,000 reindeer moving in one direction.—assisted by Eskimos who spoke no English—think of the rivers to cross, the trails to break where there are no roads, bush to conquer, and all the natural hazards of an 1,800 mile journey through wilderness—some job, but Andrew Bahr did it. Now what?

The big business man had forgotten his penknife, and apparently the members of his staff had done likewise. Everyone he asked shook their heads. Finally, he sent for Thomas, his diminutive office-boy.

"Have you got a penknife?" he asked sharply.

The boy delved into his trousers pocket and produced the necessary article.

The business man gladly accepted it.

"How is it, Thomas," he said, "that you're the only member of the staff who carries a knife with him?"

"I suppose," replied the boy, with a frank smile, "it is because I can't afford more than one pair of trousers."

A despatch from Winnipeg states that information has been received there that the Washington Government has ordered two hundred men at Fort Pembina, five hundred at Fort Snelling and six hundred in Montana to prevent Fenians or Indians crossing the line.

The men of the 49th Battalion are opposed to wearing scarlet coats and will offer strong objection at Kingston to changing their tunics.

A snow slide from the roof of the building on Front street occupied by Mr. S. Rutace caused a scare in the immediate neighborhood at noon today. A large quantity of snow came down and completely submerged Mr. S. Rutace and a horse and cutter that were standing in front of the building. A number of the persons were thrown to the ground and buried whilst the horse was fixed to the spot by the weight of snow upon it. No injury resulted.

Volunteers for the home guard met at Mr. Corby's office on Bridge Street and completed organization. A roll bearing 90 names was presented from which two companies were formed as follows. Mr. Corby being appointed Major: No. 1 Company—Capt. S. B. Burdett; 1st Lieut. S. B. Bilkwell; 2nd Lieut. A. Hoey; Col. Sergt. Jas. Macoun; Sergt., Geo. Thompson, Sergt. # CAPITAL SET-UP OF C.N.R. STUDIED

A. A. Matthews, Auditor Presents Statement to House Committee

Ottawa, April 3.—(CP)—Capital structure of the Canadian National Railways System was discussed today by the House Railway Committee when A. A. Matthews, auditor, presented a statement relative to the report on this matter. Before this, however, C. P. Fullerton, Chairman of the Board of Trustees, told Wilfrid Hanbury (Lib. Vancouver Burrard) he held the same opinion as last year there should be a revision of the capital structure of the C.N.R.

Mr. Matthews dealt with what he called misconceptions in the public mind regarding the financial operations of the system.

Corporate advances to the system had been considered as direct assets of the Dominion in the early days. Capital advances for corporate purposes have been treated as loans while capital advances for the C.N.R. were treated as expenditures. Treatment of cash deficits had also given rise to misunderstandings, he said.

From 1922 to 1927 cash deficits were treated as loans, particularly as they affected the eastern lines. From 1927 to 1931 they were treated throughout the system, but with the eastern lines excluded. From 1931 to 1934, said Mr. Matthews, they were treated as direct contributions by the Dominion. The net profit and loss on the balance sheet had not been the accumulated losses.

Mr. Matthews read editorial comment on the National Railways, disclosing, he suggested, lack of information on the part of the writers.

Speaking at Minneapolis, Milton W. Harrison, President of the Security Owners' Association of New York, had painted a picture of the C.N.R. purporting to show the system operating at an annual deficit of $175,000,000.

That brought protests from Minister of Railways H. J. Manion. An individual who could make such "an asinine statement as that" was not worth listening to, he said.

Hon. Dr. Manion (Lib. Waterloo North), said such public utterances ought to be exposed.

Harrison, continued Mr. Matthews, had declared Canada spent $237,000,000 on transcontinental railways in 1930 and that the loss to Canadians per capita now had risen from $323 to $426 a minute, or $225,000,000 a year.

The committee voiced disapproval of such misinformation receiving publicity in the United States.

J. Carswell, Chairman of the Central Committee of the Baltimore and Ohio Railway, had declared Canada had piled up deficit on her national railways of $1,000,000,000 in nine years. Carswell had asked that a speech delivered by E. W. Beatty, President of the Canadian Pacific Railys, at Vancouver be circulated widely in this address Mr. Beatty was quoted as saying the railway situation was unsettled and unbelievable. The publicly-owned system had had a deficit of $2,000,000,000 and by no process of book-keeping could these "astronomical figures", be reduced.

Mr. Beatty was also quoted as saying that in nine years the deficits had accumulated to $450,000,000.

Mr. Euler suggested that if Mr. Beatty was wrong a corrective statement should be issued. On that point, however Mr. Matthews said he had not analyzed the speech of the Canadian Pacific President and could not rely on it at present.

The King and Marshall Foch in France, 1917

KING GEORGE was wounded in the war — injured so badly that the Queen was hampered to take over many of his official duties.

In 1915, while inspecting massed troops in France, the King's horse, a mare belonging to Sir Douglas Haig, reared at the sound of the drums, slipped and threw the King to the ground. He was painfully injured and was rushed home to England in a hospital train.

It was typical of the monarch that he asked no special favors on this journey. Though suffering considerably it is related that a private in the Guards, to him the award of a military medal from the royal hands and it was during the journey home that Sgt. Oliver Brooks was decorated by the King with the Victoria Cross. The King attempted to pin it on the sergeant's tunic, but was overcome with weakness before he could complete the task.

Both King George and Queen Mary gave up every luxury, every expense, attached to their offices. The King even gave up drinking spirits in order to set an example to his people who, in the heat of the war fever, were said to be drinking too heavily. Both worked strenuously in war work. Nothing was too much to ask of them. # APPEAL IS TAKEN UNDER ADVISEMENT

G. C. Barrett Appeals Against Jail Sentence

Quebec, April 5—(CP)—Appeal of G. C. Barrett, Belleville Ont., and F. G. Jacobs, Toronto, members of the International Bible Students' Association, from a three months jail sentence for seditious conspiracy was taken under advisement by the Court of Appeals.

Defence Counsel B. L. Calder, K. C., Montreal, outlined the ideas expressed by the Bible Students or "Witnesses of Jehovah" in their pamphlets. They did not wish to destroy all authority but only criticized the present authority, which they desired to be replaced by a better one.

Eugene Marquis appearing for the Crown, told the court the pamphlets denounced the existence in the modern world of three factors, which guaranteed humanity, civil authority, judicial authority and religious authority.

ROAD SHIFT WAITS ORDERS

As yet no word has been received by the Minister of the Employment Service of Canada regarding the departure of the second shift of local workers to the road camps on the mainland Highway No. 1 North. Hastings,it was reported at the office by superintendent James V. Ross. For the past week or more the unemployed local men have been standing ready for immediate departure to the north to replace the first shift of local workers. Quarantine of the camp, which followed an outbreak of measles in two of them however, forestalled the move, and resulted in a notice from the Department that no movement of workers could be undertaken until further notice was received.

West Huntingdon Hockey Team Is Banquetted by Community

One Hundred Guests Attend Function in Orange Hall

West Huntingdon, Apr. 5. — On Wednesday evening, April 3, almost the entire community of West Huntingdon including both old and young people assembled in the dining hall of the Orange Hall where a huge banquet was staged in honor of the hockey team. It will be remembered that last year this team won both the Tip Top Trophy and the James Hill, M.P.P. Cup, but this year they were not quite so fortunate and quite good naturedly passed the trophies over to their worthy opponents, namely the Glen Ross and Zion's Hill teams. It was these boys took their defeat in such good sportsman-like manner that West Huntingdon people could not let the opportunity pass without showing the team their appreciation. The Ladies' Aid of the United Church sponsored the supper and were complimented on the excellent meal.

Promptly at eight o'clock Mr. Harold Ashley who was toastmaster for the occasion called the gathering to order and Grace was sung by the one hundred guests.

During this period Mr. Lorne Wilson of Stirling entertained the assembly by asking all to join in some community singing with Miss Helen Wright of South Point Street Belleville assisting at the piano.

After all had satisfied the inner man Toastmaster "Harold Ashley called for the first toast to the King all stood and sang the National Anthem.

Toast To Team.

The second toast "to our hockey team" was proposed by Mr. Arthur Wilson and responded to by Mr. Harold Mott, principal of the Moira Continuation school and the star player on the West Huntingdon team. In his remarks Mr. Wilson mentioned how proud all were of the way the boys met their seeming failure, and endeavored to impress by several illustrations that not only in playing games but in life as well, adversities were a necessity to make a four-square life. This was concluded by all standing to drink the health of the players and all sang "For They Are Jolly Good Fellows".

In replying to this toast Mr. Mott said, on behalf of the team, how much they appreciated the interest the community had taken in the hockey team. But he thought perhaps the greatest of more all the games during the winter might be better. He stated that at the beginning of the season the slogan seemed to be beat West Huntingdon.

Contributes Reading.

At this point Mr. Charles Moran, principal of the West Huntingdon public school, gave a humorous reading entitled "The Whole Truth".

The toast to the Centre Hockey League was proposed by Mr. Judson McGowan and responded to by Mr. Clayton Wright. Mr. McGowan spoke in glowing terms of the members of the various hockey teams in the league and stated they were all good sports. Special mention was made of the good work Mr. Harold Mott had done for the local team, although it inconvenienced him at times.

Mr. William Whitty of Stirling, president of the league was to have replied to this toast but was unavoidably detained and past president Mr. Clayton Wright capably replied stating that the local team had nothing to be very proud of as they had won two cups and just lost two so now they just broke even.

He explained that the league was composed of players from four townships, namely, Rawdon, Huntingdon, Sidney and Thurlow and were all rural boys.

Musical Members.

Messrs. Carl and Harold Thompson delighted the gathering at this time with two harmonica selections. The toast to the ladies was proposed by Mr. Charles Wright and responded to by Mrs. Peter McInroy, president of the Ladies' Aid. Mr. Wright as one of the younger but perhaps nearly the best player on the team said he missed the silverware decorations that adorned the tables last year but was quite optimistic regarding the future of the team and thanked the ladies on behalf of the team for the banquet.

In replying Mrs. McInroy said it was a pleasure for the ladies to see the men enjoying a good meal.

Rev. R. J. Merriam, pastor of the United Church, was called upon for a few remarks and in his humorous way let it an honor to be placed at the head table and be among such a loyal bunch of boys and told of an incident in his college days that taught him the value of good team work. He also referred to several cases of real team work in connection with his congregation.

Miss Edna Reid, Messrs. Lorne Hagerman and Thomas Sarles gave several selections on their guitars and violin which were much appreciated. Toastmaster Harold Ashley then introduced the guest speaker for the evening, Mr. J. O. Herity of Belleville.

Mr. J. O. Herity.

When Mr. Herity arose to speak he was greeted with a most hearty welcome which he appreciated very much. Before launching out on his subject Mr. Herity (being a Huntingdon boy and knowing most of the people from infancy) gave a very reminiscent speech. He said he felt very much at home. He was present at the dedication of the hall in which the banquet was held and attended school here for a short time. He spoke of two outstanding men who helped in a very large measure to make the history of West Huntingdon and although they have passed to the great beyond, their works do follow them. These were Mr. James Haggarty, Sr., and Mr. Thomas Morton. Mr. Haggarty was M.P.P and Mr Morton taught school and also operated a farm. At times he would have as many as one hundred pupils and did not receive a large salary.

Commends Team.

Mr. Herity said he had enjoyed the former speakers at the banquet and did not like to hear the remarks of one when he said that the West Huntingdon team were reported as having the cleanest boys in the league. The speaker praised the players for their showing this year and stated that when the great umpire would give His decision he hoped He would not score against any. "It wasn't the fact that you won or lost but how did you take it" he remarked. Mr. Herity said he had had a very successful and long life and had gone from place to place to deliver addresses but this was the first time he had been invited to this community.

His subject for the evening was "The Human Mind" and he gave a very concise and helpful discourse on this most wonderful thing called the mind. Quoting such men as Sir Isaac Watts as stating that "it was not the nature of man, but the power by which he was measured." He compared minds to gardens. If a garden is cultivated and worked properly it will produce results. But if not it will naturally grow weeds. The same is true of minds—they must be properly cultivated to bring results. The great speed at which light travels was astonishing but minds are even greater, than this. In conclusion the speaker quoted one of Shakespeare's, "If", which was quite appropriate for this occasion.

Vote of Thanks.

Mr. Elmer Post in a neat speech moved a vote of thanks and it was ably seconded in a lengthy speech by Mr. Phillip Carr to the guest speaker and the other artists who helped with the program. Singing of the National Anthem closed this outstanding event. Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Haggarty of Belleville were present at the banquet, also Messrs. Anthony and Frank Herity of Moira and Mr. Arthur Leavens of Belleville. Messrs. Harold Henderson and Norma Tomlison of Ivanhoe were also given places of honor.

MARMORA CLUB IS ENTERTAINED

Men's Club of St. John's Church, Stirling Are Hosts

Stirling—On Wednesday evening the men's club of St. John's Anglican Church entertained a large group of visitors at their regular meeting held in their club rooms. The program was in the hands of the local Boy Scouts who presented one of the finest evenings entertainments in the history of the club. The type of numbers presented by the boys were wide in range so everyone present really enjoyed some number either otherwise depending on their individual taste.

The President of the Club Mr. Earl Morrow acted as chairman for the first part of the evening and Rev. A. S. McConnell opened the meeting with prayer. The choir of man the boys called on S. M. Tom Ward, who spoke of fine training our boys received when they became members of this vast organization which throughout the world was doing its bit towards raising the standards of manhood. The speaker stated that every praise could not be given to the name of Sir Baden Powell, who was responsible for the beginning of the movement which now reached into nearly every country in the world. To estimate the good accomplished by the Scout movement would be impossible.

The Scout orchestra offered the first number on the program, a request number "I love you truly" those taking part in the orchestra were Gr. Sprowell, piano, Ray Williams and H. West, guitar; Lloyd Rowland, saxophone; Jack Duffin and James Ward Cornet; P. Smeaton, sousaphone and Scout Master F. T. Hubbs continued the program with a fine address on the principles of scouting. Two boys did selections on the guitar were given by J. Mcdonald. "The Sidewalks of the Rockies" and then ever popular "One two three four." At this point in the evening a group of boys put on a shadow act that caused a ripple of laughter. Acting in the shadow of an arch light behind a screen the boys went through a barber shop story in which the victim was apparently slashed to pieces with razors, only to be a large razor. When at last the poor fellow appeared from behind the screen he was carefully bandaged with adhesive so that he could hardly be recognized. During the sing Malcolm gave a violin solo "Pease Put" with G. Sprowell at the piano. Patrol Leader Arthur Gould and Geo. Duffin then gave a practical demonstration with

TESTS TO SHOW NON-PATERNITY

Brooklyn. — The application of blood grouping tests, developed at the Jewish Hospital of Brooklyn and embodied in legislation just enacted in New York State, is explained by Dr. A. S. Wiener, associate in the division of genetics and biometrics at the Jewish hospital.

They may be used in cases of disputed paternity. The presumption that all children born in lawful wedlock are legitimate may be overcome, said Dr. Wiener, by scientific proof that the husband could not be the father of the child.

Thus, the mother belongs to group "A", the child to group "B" and the husband to group "A", the husband could not be the father of the child, since the child possesses a substance "B" which neither of the supposed parents has.

"The law," he added, "can only be used to prove non-paternity, and not to prove paternity."

In criminal cases, Dr. Wiener said the blood grouping tests are valuable for purposes of identification.

He cited as an example the case of a criminal who escaped after being pursued and wounded by police. Some of the criminal's blood left at the scene in the crime is grouped and found to belong to group "B", and "M". Later several individuals are apprehended, and it is known that one of these has committed the crime. All individuals except those belonging to group "B", type "M", can be eliminated immediately.

Current Attractions at Local Theatres

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE BELLE
"David Copperfield"
This film Has Greatest Cast in History

"David Copperfield", the sensational hit picture which comes to the Belle Theatre for four days, beginning Thursday (Saturday), promises to be unusual in many respects.

Advance information from Hollywood lists these facts:

It is the picture which introduces to the screen little Freddie Bartholomew, the ten-year-old boy who is hailed as the greatest screen "find" since Jackie Coogan rocketed to fame with Charlie Chaplin in "The Kid". Freddie plays the lovable "young" Dave.

Millions have read it

It is an adaptation of a novel which has entertained millions, and was called by its author, Charles Dickens, his favorite child.

Sixty-five stars and featured players are in the unprecedented cast. Among the stars are W. C. Fields, Lionel Barrymore, Maureen O'Sullivan, Edna May Oliver, Lewis Stone, Frank Lawton, Freddie Bartholomew, Elizabeth Allan, Roland Young, Basil Rathbone, Hugh Williams, Herbert Mundin, to mention only a few.

The picture has been well more than a year in preparation and production and has a record for lavishness.

Novelist Plays Role

It is one of the few pictures on record in which the writer of the celebrated book, which is one of the leading novelists of contemporary literature, plays one of the roles; the novelist is Hugh Walpole, the eminent writer and authority on Dickensiana.

It has as producer and director the man who adapted the novel to cycle of "worth while" stories on the screen: David O. Selznick, of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, producer of "Dancing Lady" and "Viva Villa!" and Jack Conway, the director who was associated with Selznick on "Little Women," "Bill of Divorcement" and "Tale of Two Cities."

It is an outstanding example of a famous book which is coming to the screen true in spirit and flavor to the original and without a trace of the obvious picture lineup.

An outstanding screen offering for the same program is the exhibition of Walt Disney's new technicolor cartune "The Tortoise and the Hare."

It is important that you see "David Copperfield" from the beginning; it starts daily at 2.40, 7.10 and 9.20 p.m. Complete shows at 2.30, 7.00 and 9.10.

Bing Crosby Departing

Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields and Joan Bennett are appearing at the Belle tonight for the last times in the romantic fun filled musical romance "Mississippi" — "The March of Time" and Comedy.

AT THE CAPITOL
"The Night Is Young"
Evelyn Laye and Charles Novarro' in Leading Excellent Double Bill

Hamper Novarro's impressive uniforms, teamed with a piquant new personality from England, champagne-blonde Evelyn Laye, charms, with music, romance, comedy and drama in "The Night Is Young", glamorous new Viennese musical romance, playing at the Capitol Theatre.

Oscar Hammerstein II and Sigmund Romberg, the team that created "Desert Song" and "New Moon", wrote the lilting, hauntingly continental music of the spectacular new production, featuring about the imperial ballet, and staged with massive and spectacular settings and gorgeous costumes.

Novarro, as the young archduke, sings superbly, and Miss Laye, too, has a glorious voice plus much beauty. And, combined to give comedy and light-hearted romance, they also stage some poignant dramatic moments.

The story deals with a young archduke's romantic love affair with a ballet girl. Dudley Murphy directed with deft skill. The little touches such as the musical marionettes the cooney song of Charles Butterworth and other detail add unique charm.

The cast includes Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel, Edward Everett Horton, Donald Cook, Henry Stephenson, Donalind Russell, Herman Bing, Charles Judels and Albert Conti, all of whom lend their roles with distinction.

Warns the Woman

Combining large doses of thrills and romance, "Wame the Woman", featuring Richard Cromwell and Arline Judge will be shown on this week's screen at the Capitol as an exciting newspaper story about the adventurous life of a reporter who is responsible for an expose of a corrupt city government.

Cromwell, as the initially seen at the shy, retiring lad who wins his fair lady in the end, is presented as a very much different character than in the "Working" The story carries him through intrigue of politics and a baffling murder case, which ends in a thrilling manner. Naturally a dreamer, this city reporter knows how to bear under the influence of a girl and things happen fast and furiously as the result.

An excellent cast supports Cromwell and Miss Judge including Una Roy, Crane Wilbur, Thomas Jackson, Edward Henry Stephenson, Charles Wilson and Purnell Pratt.

Capitol News is shown preceding the feature attractions. Last complete show 8.50.

TOMORROW ONLY
"Tailspin Tommy"

Thrilling air serial taken from the popular Hal Forrest comic strip.

FILLY MAY WIN KENTUCKY DERBY

Nellie Flag Will Supply Chief Competition at Louisville

(By Orin Robertson)

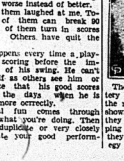
New York, April 5.—(AP)—Only one filly ever won the Kentucky Derby and victories of gallops have been few, but this year one of each figures prominently with a speedy pair of colts in the pre-race calculations.

This filly is Nellie Flag, from Werren Wright's Calumet farm; the seldom like Mrs. Payne Whitney's Greentree Stable.

Nellie Flag left no doubt as to her class in winning the matron stakes at Belmont Park, the Selima at Laurel and the Kentucky Jockey Club Stakes at Latonia. She earned $55,790 during the year and was second only to Chance Sun, the future book favorite, in that record.

Commonwealth showed fine stamina in taking the mile and 70 yards of the endurance handicap late in November at Bowie. He won five of nine starts.

Play Eye started eleven times, won four races and went unplaced only twice in seven starts. The latter's wave faced the barrier 21 times and was the best colt performer in the one mile junior champion stakes at Aqueduct. He was first in four other races and third three times.



Preparing for the classic boat race against their first out-door workout on the Thames. The annual race on the Thames. The annual race ford, the Cambridge rowing crew will be rowed this year on April 6.

Chickasaw Indian is Valuable Aid To The Phillies

A Chickasaw Indian who overcame the handicaps of illness and a broken collarbone in his march to the major leagues is counted on by Manager Jimmy Wilson to help lead the Phils out of the basehell wilderness.

He is Ruel (Chief) Moore, purchased last summer from the Baltimore Orioles. After coming to the Phills, a seventh-place club, Moore won five games and lost seven, not an impressive record, but showed plenty of big league stuff every time he went to the mound.

Like Carlisle Guard

The Chief has the same bulk and heft as those bucks Pop Warner used as guards on the Carlisle football teams featured by Jim Thorpe. He puts his weight gracefully behind a great fast ball. His smoothness of delivery is pleasing to all but batsmen to watch. He has his arm operating at the best career with the Phils has shown poise and courage in the pinches.

The story tells tell of Indian dignity, indifference and bearing of sportsmen. Chief Moore has all of that. There have been times in his pitching life when he had to have it to survive.

He was born May 7, 1910, in Tishomingo, Okla., and won a high song once was written about. He started pitching when 18 years old, travelling from town to town in his hour for semi-pro teams of the Southwest. He wasn't noticed by organized baseball until 1929, when signed by Abilene of the West Texas league. At that time he broke his pitching arm (he's a right-handed hurler) while sliding into a base.

Before the accident he had shown a lot of stuff. So upon his recovery, Wichita Falls gave him a contract. But the Chief had the misfortune to catch a bad case of influenza and was released.

Comes Right Back

It seemed his career was ended, at least so far as the Texas league was concerned, but he came right back with Muskogee in the Western Association and won 13 games.

EUEL MOORE

Next he exercised his penchant for pitching for last place clubs by signing with San Antonio back in the Texas league. April, 1931 he was the only Santone pitcher to finish with better than a .500 average.

After a good season at Galveston, he was brought north to Baltimore. Last year, after he had won eight of the 18 games won by the Orioles, during the first two months of the season, the Phils drafted him in December.

The Phillies, greatly improved by Jimmy Wilson in the year of management, appear certain to climb in 1935, an effort in which the Chief is pretty sure to be a big help.

ERFECTING STROKE CAMBRIDGE CREW P

BROTHERS DISCUSS PITCHING STRATEGY

The only first string brother battery that will be seen in action in the major leagues this summer, is shown above at an unusual angle as they discuss strategy over before starting on to the diamond. Apparently they are deciding on pitching strategy during the training season of their battery clicks in a big way.

The Boston Red Sox. Together they are Rick Ferrell, (LEFT), catcher and brother Wesley Ferrell, a fireball hurler of a few seasons back. Both figure this is his year for a comeback. Joe Cronin's Red Sox will be only too pleased if the brothers do the finishing stroke.

HOUSE REALIZES REFORM OF PENAL SYSTEM ON WAY

Scientific Handling of Law Breakers is Urged

BORSTAL SYSTEM

Youthful Convicts Likely to be Segregated by New Plan

Ottawa, April 5.—(CP)—Reform of Canada's penal system is on the way the House of Commons realized today after a full day's debate on penitentiaries. Scientific handling of law-breakers rather than sentimental pleas for mild treatment were the dominant notes of the discussion yesterday as the only woman member, Miss Agnes Macphail led in demand for reform.

Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of Justice, asserted Canadian penitentiaries were now on a par or higher standard than any in the world but outlined reforms contemplated in the near future. He also said many changes had been made in the past few years.

Mr. Guthrie's announcement included the following:

He will consider an investigation of penitentiaries by a Royal Commission;

He will appoint a commissioner to investigate charges a high penitentiary official made alighting statements about Miss Macphail.

A psychiatrist and a psychologist will be added to each penitentiary in the near future;

The Borstal system of segregating youthful offenders will be installed following study of the system by an official, who will go to England.

He favors a central place for executions in each province but doubts the advisability of substituting electrocution for hanging.

Miss Macphail Supported

In her pleas for reform Miss Macphail drew support from both two Conservatives, one a noted criminal lawyer, who has defended many notorious murderers of murder cases, and the other a psychologist, who has a large penitentiary in his constituency. The former was Charles W. Bell of Hamilton and the other General A. E. Ross of Kingston.

Woman Fails to Keep Suicide Pact

Boston, Apr. 5 (AP)—A man identified by Police Lieutenant Andrew J. Hurley as Harry B. Van Allen, 35, New York bond trader, plunged to death from the 30th floor of the Hotel Statler Thursday in what Hurley described as a "double suicide pact".

A hysterical woman, about 25 years old, Hurley said, was found in the hotel room from which, he said, Van Allen apparently leaped. She said she declined to identify herself further than to admit she signed a note found in the room as "Ben Ryan". Hurley said she told him she "lost her nerve" and failed to carry out her part of the pact.

Re John Robert Cooke Estate

(Supreme Hall)
Before Makins, J.

Re John Robert Cooke Estate—R. C. Donnan, K.C., for executors; C. A. Payne, K.C., for legatees; C. A. Cameron for mortgagors and makers of promissory notes owing the deceased.

Judgment: "Motion by the National Trust Company, the executors of the estate of the late Honorable John Robert Cooke, deceased, for advice and direction of certain questions arising in respect of the disposition of arrears of interest and cancellation of same upon certain mortgages and promissory notes in held.

"On or about the beginning of 1924 the deceased had a statement of his mortgages made out showing the principal and interest due up to the first of January, 1924. At the top of this statement, he has the following memorandum: 'Interest on the following mortgages reduced from 6 per cent. to 3 per cent. for at least 10-20 years.' On the are the words in the handwriting of the deceased: 'all arrears of interest cancelled to date.' On an envelope there are figures showing bonds, cash in bank, mortgages and notes aggregating $65,450, and below is his handwriting is the following: "All arrears of interest on mortgages and notes cancelled to date, as people simply cannot pay." On Oct. 10, 1933, Mr. Cooke wrote a letter to one Conger McConnell, advising him that he proposed reducing the interest for this and the next year, at least,' on his note to 3 per cent., and it is said that he wrote similar letters to all mortgagors and makers of promissory notes in which he was interested. The evidence before me is not clear on this. The deceased died on Aug. 13th, 1934, and his will died shortly thereafter and there were no children. The deceased had his will drawn on September 19, 1928, and probate of the same was granted to the National Trust Company by the Surrogate Court of the County of Hastings on October 20, 1934. The estate would be decreased by $6,000 if effect is given to the reduction and cancellation of the interest. The terms of the will do not throw any light on the questions to be determined and it is of opinion that I have not sufficient evidence before me to warrant a determination of the questions involving such a substantial sum in the absence of the executors. There is no satisfactory evidence of whether he notified the debtors by letter, and no evidence of the attitude of the deceased toward the questions involved either before or after the notations referred to.

"I am of opinion that there should be an issue tried between the executors who should be plaintiffs, and each class of debtors for the determination of all questions involved. If the parties can agree on the terms of same I may be spoken to again. Order accordingly. Costs of all parties out of the estate, those of executors as between solicitor and client."

EXCITING WEEKEND

Hon. Mr. Croll Says Relief is a Federal Responsibility

Toronto, April 5—(CP)— Tail end of an exciting week in the Ontario Legislature found members counting today on a brief quiet session so they could return home for a week-end in preparation for night sessions next week.

Opening opposition attack on the budget brought down Tuesday afternoon by Premier Hepburn was the keynote of the week. Col. W. H. Price (Cons. Toronto-Parkdale). Hon. Mr. Croll (Lib. Windsor-Sandwich) demanded the government reveal its plans for balancing the budget instead of calling a fall session.

Col. Price charged the large deficit proposed in the budget was to harness the government's opponents and said the deficit should have been avoided by more economical administration coupled with denunciation of municipal councils for recent unemployed demonstrations. He said relief was primarily a federal responsibility and that the municipal, and provinces should share in it.

Fourth speaker in the budget debate was E. J. Anderson (Lib. Welland) former minister of the Henry administration for departing from a policy of public ownership.

NO GREAT DEMAND FOR FARM HELP

Concentration of former unemployed men at relief and road camps throughout this area should create a brisk demand for farm hands in the city, but such is not the case, it was reported at the local Employment Service of Canada office today. Although the season is late, even though spring work is in full swing on many farms throughout the district the demand for farm laborers has been slow and wages are little above those paid last year, stated James W. Ross, superintendent of the unemployment bureau. Average wages for farm help this year were reported to range from $15 to $20 per month, with as high as $25 per month being paid for experienced help. Last year wages descended as low as $13.

Monday morning we were on our way early and passed into North Carolina. Gasoline was now 18 cents per gallon. Here we were going further and further away from the luxuries of supply-depots. Atlanta, Raleigh, capital of the state, we had an excellent dinner in the coffee shop of the Sir Walter Raleigh Hotel. We now began to experience the full the delights of eating Southern cooking. The menu was: a fruit cup of grapes, bananas and grapefruit, string beans, mashed potatoes, roast lamb or fish, celery and cabbage salad, and hot mince pie. Here we had the greasing of the car done and oil changed and sped on to the South, arriving in Lourtsburg just as darkness was settling down. We had passed through beautiful college towns and admired there the Ole old stone mansions of the Southern aristocracy. We spent the night in one of these, called the "Dutch Colonial Home." This house was kept by two young women, the last of their family, and this was the ancestral home. We had two adjoining rooms, a double and a single one with bath, on the ground floor. The rooms had large wide windows, high ceilings and carved mantels. The driving room extending across the front of the house, with its spacious fireplace and fruit and old cut glass furniture was very interesting.

We left Lourtsburg early the next morning and stopped for breakfast at Bennetsville, a busy little town in the tobacco and cotton district. It was bitterly cold there and we were glad to get back into the car and wrap up warmly in our motor rugs. It was at this time that the cold wave swept into the Southern States and reached Florida, even into Florida depriving 25 percent of the orange and grapefruit crop. The cold we did not experienced in the south since 1894 Thus, though we went farther and farther south day by day we did not leave the cold behind us till we were south of Jacksonville, for by that time, the cold wave had passed and it was warming up. Now the Bennetsville we passed the line into South Carolina. The country here was now almost level and we saw extensive cotton fields and some cotton ginning mills at last. Large plants, also corn fields with some desolate looking stalks of corn. The abandoned fields were interspersed with stretches of woodland and the only buildings were the negro cabins with here and there the better house of the planter. The negro cabins are scattered in groups on an estate, and sometimes separated by several large fields. These cabins, as a rule, have no glass in the windows, but have large wooden shutters that hook on the inside. Each cabin has a fireplace chimney at one gable end, wide as the bottom narrowing to a tapering mud chimney as the top. The front of the roof extends out to form the roof of a wide verandah. The cabins are of weather beaten unpainted boards, and each cabin was a little pile of rough wood and a thin wisp of smoke was seen coming from the chimney of each. In most cases the cabin doors were wide open and inside we could see that the chief furniture was a large bed with a stove while cooking. The cabins seemed very clean but here was no doubt but that the inhabitants were very poor. Well washed but often ragged clothes hanged on the clothes line. I learned later that the plantation owner divided up his estate among the poor tenants and they received half of the cotton crop but as they were often in debt to him for food and necessities from one season to another, they often had little left for themselves after the harvest.

We had dinner that day at Sumter and then drove on till dark. We were now about 50 miles from Savannah. No village was in sight though we found out in the morning that we were only a few miles from Ridgeland. We had to stay in the wayside cabin. It was very cold that night and we had to top off the little wood stove going till the cabin was warm. Then we combined and close to this building we found a coupe and cabin trailer, so called upon these neighbors in the morning and found that the owner of the car and trailer was Mr. Granam of New York State who was on his way to Florida. We were surprised to learn that they knew Belleville well, for they had been employed a few years ago by the late Bob Weller as leaders of a road show at the Capitol Theatre. They had spent some weeks in Belleville.

We were up early at 6 the next morning and started out while the white frost was still heavy on the ground and made a thin mist in the air. On we went towards Savannah and passed over great stretches over extensive marshes and the yellow waters of large rivers until we reached Savannah itself. Savannah, the dirty river of the South whose shore is a marshy jungle and whose surroundings are already and strong. Some miles farther on we reached the city of Savannah, which is on the river nearer the coast but not near enough to give a view of the ocean. Savannah is a fine old city. In the centre are squares and parks adorned with statues of Confederate generals and beautiful southern trees and shrubs and tablets explaining the early history. When we arrived back at the car here after having our breakfast, we found a negro lad wiping off the dust. He eagerly grasped the coin we gave him trounced his hat and walked off, tossing the coin in the air and whistling. From Savannah we went on towards Jacksonville, passing over more marshes and wide rocky rivers and later extending away to the ocean. We drove through the old city of Brunswick and as night was coming on, reached the outskirts of Jacksonville where we found a little cabin to rent for the last home. The little boy in this home was quite excited. He and his sister had spread a bun the previous night with water from the river and in the morning he had been thrilled to see it covered with icicles. He was having the problem of tales read to him, eagerly hoping for colder weather so that he could see snow.

The next morning we came on south to Daytona Beach and then passed through the large city of Ocala, south of which in the late afternoon we passed over a bridge and last detour. The road was narrow, full of deep ruts and great holes and we were thankful when we came out once more on the highway. Near Brooksville we saw the first orange and grapefruit groves. After spending another pleasant night in a tourist home here we came on to Tampa early the next morning and then crossed Tampa Bay by the wonderful Gandy Bridge six miles long to the city. the toll at the bridge, the official presented us with a fan copy of the St. Petersburg Times. We found the city full of happy tourists and we were happy too, to have completed safely a 1700 mile journey without accident to ourselves or without any unnatural expense to the car not even a puncture although we had a 1929 model Chrysler sedan.

This College is doing a great work all over Canada in mining and development camps, supplying books and magazines for the men and making a success of assisting any foreign citizens to perfect their English and become efficient citizens. We are advised that Dr. Bradwin hopes to have two competent teachers in every camp.

Two of the socially inclined men decided Saturday evening, during one evening recently, hurriedly consumed their supper and proceeded to dress that they might take a bath in the family tin dipper. Ray called out: "Mr. Blakely, fix up your neck clean." Good old Jack just said: "Wash it some more son, water never hurt a boy's neck."

The boys arrayed themselves in their best duds, consisting, long woolen socks, high boots, mackinaw shirts etc. One had even tied a necktie. After spending two hours in these mysterious "doling up actions" they left camp whistling "Well, good-night, common folks. We're off for a dance only three miles down the road. ● Brake requirements are severe in Toronto. Yet this stock model Hudson-built Terraplane stopped so quickly that the brake testing meter could not record it. Before you buy any new car, see if it can match this safe stopping record. Test them all. Compare other features, too, with what Hudson and Terraplane offer—then decide.

Maroons Break Down Defence Of Toronto Leafs Winning 1st Game of Stanley Cup Series 3-2

Trottier Scored Deciding Goal in 5 Minutes of Overtime

SECOND EXCITING

Period Provided Heavy Scoring and Bruising Body Checking

(By Elmer Dulmage)

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, April 5.—(CP)—Shaken by a body blow of such pretentions as more boisterous, fire-eating red machines of another day would have been proud to acclaim, Toronto Maple Leafs limped along into the 1935 version of the Stanley Cup-bound Montreal Maroons.

The threat of Thomas P. Gorman's Maroons, the craft adjudged by experts rather than untimely ed durability, had assumed menacing proportions. Rugged, hip-throwing Normen for the occasion, the Redmen were in command of the enemy camp.

They bashed the National Hockey League champions 3-2 last night in the first game of the classic series, sinking the winning goal in overtime after behaving like the Leafs for two periods with crushing bodychecks, fast one support-passing in the Montreal repertoire.

Fellow pilots like Bob Gracie and Russ Blinco, welterweights of the stature of Baldy Northcott, Jimmy Ward, Gus Marker and Herbie Cain suddenly became fearless heavyweights. They shook the Leafs like nine-pins in a spectacular relief period, ranging all over the mid-ice zone to attack the champions.

Strange Procedure

It was a strange procedure, that turned out to be the method the doctor ordered for Maroons. After holding the Leafs to a 2-2 score they went back to defensive hockey in the third period, only occasionally applying real pressure.

In the overtime the Leafs lagged, tired by the thumping and the young men from Montreal went about the business of winning the game. It required five minutes and twenty-eight seconds. Earl Robinson, the outstanding forward on the ice, sidestepping King Clancy and laid a rifle pass to Marker, who relayed to Trottier scored sadly.

Northcott, Ward and Hooley Smith had just finished a four-minute stint, completely outplaying Toronto's seige guns, Charlie Conacher, Harvey Jackson and Joe Primeau. They had almost, but not quite, beaten George Hainsworth on four separate drives.

Through the second and third periods, Maroons had no appreciable edge. But they absorbed punishment more readily, seemed fresher than the Leafs for the finish and never stopped firing rubber at the Veteran Hainsworth. At the same time they checked superbly.

Connell Webbly

Robinson shot the red team in front early in the second period, catching Blues Blinco's pass from a face-off. He was directly in front of the Toronto cage and had only to pick an open spot. Ten minutes later Frank Finnigan jammed the second of his own shot past Alex Connell and squared the count.

Connell who had webbed a couple of times in handling long shots, missed Clancy's knee-high drive altogether. The King let it go as he piled into Lionel Conacher on the Montreal defence and the referee failed to see the puck at all. That made it 2-1 for Toronto.

Before his period ended Cy Wentworth broke away and forked over to Connell. They almost had him stopped at the Leaf blue line but he recovered the puck and shot. Hainsworth took it on his pads, stepped back to clear and Doug Big Marker dumbfoundead on top of him. Wentworth clubbed at the puck until both it and Hainsworth were in the goal.

That was even better than Maroons had expected and they seemed content with the deadlock in the second period. Northcott, who was to his job of handcuffing Charlie Conacher, Ward kept track of Jackson. Between them Conacher and Jackson had only four dead-on shots.

Stanley Cup Notes

(By The Canadian Press)

Red Horner, the bad man of the National Hockey League, the most penalized player in the game, hasn't been near the penalty box since the playoffs started. Red thumped Maroons around with old-time abandon last night but was given a change from the young riot, that took place three Saturdays ago, when Leafs won the N.H.L. title from Boston. There was hardly a murmur from the players as they slowly dressed. Some thought Cy Wentworth's goal should not have been allowed because of the pile-up on George Hainsworth.

Hooley Smith issued orders, that the skates he wore last night were not to be touched before Saturday's game. Fingering they were not only sharpened just previous, but probably were lucky too, he decided to stick with them.

Chums since boyhood days in Ottawa, Alex Connell of Maroons and King Clancy shook hands warmly at the finish. It was a good night for Clancy's sooth. Clancy scored a goal and Connell outpointed the Leafs.

The crowd of 13,514 was below expectations. It was a full house as far as the seating capacity went but standing room space in the big rink would have accommodated another 1,500. Toronto officials expect a record breaking crowd for the second game Saturday.

The Conachers—Lionel of Maroons and Charlie of Leafs—didn't come together once Slew Evans and Allan Shields were the Montreal defencemen looking after Charlie's side of the rink. They did right class work keeping out the big Toronto marksman.

DEACONS AND "Y" WINNERS IN CITY SERIES

Will Meet in Sudden Death Game For The Title

FIRST GAME BEST

Deacons Had no Trouble in Downing B. C. I. Juniors

Deacon A.C. Juniors and the "Y" Quinn' were successful in downing Geo. Laughlin's B.C.I. juniors and seniors in the opening two hill of the Belleville City Basketball championships at the B.C.I. Gymnasium last night. The Y.M.C.A. squad took matters easy to trim the Collegiate seniors 28 to 12 while the Deacons romped home to a 33 to 14 victory over the tri-colored junior students. The second nity championship game games will take the spotlight in local sport circles next week.

Although the "Collegiate" kids never gave up trying to battle their way to experienced opposition, neither was one in doubt after the games had gone but under way. In the opening Y.M.C.A. senior Collegiate game the older and more experienced intermediate players took matters rather easy, once they assumed the lead and won easily 28 to 19. While the Morden-coached clan turned up with only five players they proved equal to the occasion as Faulkner, Smith and Burley carried the much speed and experience, while White and Wickerson took their duties as the defence. Burley with ten points and Smith eight to lead all scores of the game. Wally Hilton, Clarke, Fred Forster, Sharpe and Blaker looked the best of the B.C.I. seniors. The "Y" led 15 to 12 at half-time.

Deacons Win Handily

The night-cap affair did not prove as interesting as the curtain-raiser due to the fact the Deacons height and experience proved too great an obstacle for the Junior "Collegians". Albert Faulkner led the marksmen with ten points as Marlyn scored six. Only four, Tobe six and Countryman an even half dozen points.

Mule of the Laing B.C.I. juniors by scoring six points. Dickens got five and Mikes two. Langton, Westfall and Ronsky also played good ball for the "students".

The ball time score was 21 to 3 while Deacons loafed in the second half and won at full time 33 to 14.

CURRENT SPORT
DAY BY DAY

The local softballers are beginning to get rather frisky under the feet as small groups or cliques can been seen daily conversing in relationship to their favorite recreation. Already plans are in the making to again operate the old Wall Street League, a pre-season loop, that has met with success in years past. It had been proposed to have four teams presumably the Ashtons Club, Alemites, College Hill and the S. E. A. C. in the league this year, although final plans have not exactly been announced as yet. The softballers are anxious to get the Wall Street loop under way before the end of this month in order to complete their schedule before the regular O.A.S.A. season is opened about June 1st. Incidentally the local softballers have nominated Ed. Goodier, of the Ashtons Club, to be an executive candidate at the annual meeting of the O.A.S.A. that is being held in Peterboro this year.

While on the subject of organized O.A.S.A. softball recently learned the Redeerville team would like nothing better than to throw their hat in with the Prince-talling Belleville City Softball League this year. Whether or not the latest softball organization is dickering to get in with the local softball magnates for an "all-star" side teams could be procured and the roster of the league with Eric Hall's kept down to four a classy six teamed loop could be arranged. Manager Harry Rollins who is convalescing at his home following a serious operation last month, is reported to be much improved in health and will be ready to call the annual meeting and election of officers for the city loop within ten days or two weeks. In the meantime missionary work in relationship to a larger softball league in the city has started. It is understood that the bleachers over at Victoria Park have been removed and will not be erected in 1935. The Peoples Club they feel money in their investment last year. If that be so they must have settled their labor at a ridiculous high figure.

Did you know that Ted Morris, dynamic flying wing of the Toronto Argonauts football club, recently left play for Hamilton Tigers next fall, at least Hugh Emmey, the manager of the Argos, denies such rumors, while Mack Dunn of the Fort Erie team in the Niagara District hockey league, announced he would accompany the Hamilton Tiger football aggregation on their present tour to England and the continent. The Tigers leave for Europe tomorrow.

Remember when Harold Webster, only 37 years old then, won the Hamilton-to-Guanjo 30-mile marathon five years ago today, he led all the way. Webster waited until 1934 to score his greatest triumph, winning the British Empire Games marathon in London.

Promoter Clem Allen of the Stewart-Warner-Alemite A. C. seems more than pleased with the response from boxers desirous to enter the coming Golden Gloves bouts here at the local Armouries next Tuesday night. Matchmaker Allen did expect some entries from Peterboro, but as pointed out by him a splendid card can be arranged from the 23 applications received. Entries were received from Gibbard A.C. of Napanee, Maple Leaf Boxing Club, A. C.A.F., R. F. No. 22; Bay Street A.C. of Trenton as well as the local Seath End club. Word was received from the newly formed S. W. A. A. C. centre whose colors the boxers are being staged in conjunction with the local Rinsmen's Club. Matchmaker Allen informed us this morning that a complete list of all fighters to appear on Tuesday would be available in tomorrow's issue. # HIS LUMBAGO HAS NOT COME BACK

Keeps Free of it With Kruschen

There can be no doubt about the effectiveness of the remedy this man uses against lumbago. Read his letter:—

"About four years ago, I had a bad attack of lumbago. After being in hospital for two weeks taking X-ray treatment, I started taking Kruschen Salts. Since then, I am happy to say, I have not been troubled with lumbago. I shall still continue taking Kruschen to be sure the lumbago won't come back." —A. C., C.

Why is it that Kruschen is so effective in keeping lumbago away? Simply because it goes right down to the root of the trouble, and removes the cause, which is an impure bloodstream. The six salts in Kruschen keep the bloodstream pure, and vigorous by promoting a perfect elimination of all the causes of elimination.

VERMILYEA'S SON CLOSELY WATCHED

Attempt to Repeat Escape to Father at Belleville is Frustrated

Los Angeles, April 5.—(CP)—Special precautions were taken at the San Fernando County Jail here today to prevent Nathaniel Vermilyea, 18, charged with murder, still eager to "see Dad before he's gone".

The young fugitive, hatless, coatless, and without warm clothing, dared 3,000 miles across desert mountains and wintry passes in an effort, in his determination to reach Belleville, Ont., where his father, Harold Vermilyea, is awaiting execution for matricide. But the youth was caught at near-by Hollister.

He refused to be consoled and tearfully told officers, "My Dad is going to be hanged in Canada. I wanted to be with him before he's gone."

The boy's mother, living at Sacramento, is divorced from the condemned man. The boy was sent there after his father's arrest on a bad rap one away. Returning here he was taken to the detention home.

Shelter Regulations Are Under Criticism

Stratford, April 5.— The Department of Public Welfare will be asked to send a member before the Perth County Council during this week's session to explain the proposed regulations in connection with children's aid shelters throughout the Province. The members of the Council are opposed to a number of the regulations as they have been outlined, and several of the Reeves voiced their opposition and disapproval today. At the last session a letter was forwarded to the department asking that the present arrangement in effect at the Children's Shelter in Stratford be permitted to continue. Since that time a letter has been received from Hon. David Croll, Ontario Minister of Welfare, attaching a copy of the proposed regulations and stating that there can be no exceptions made.

ON LINCOLN

Editor Ontario Intelligencer,
Dear sir:—

In your issue of Feb. 23 you published an address on Lincoln by my old friend Mr. J. O. Herity, secretary-manager of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce. I dislike finding fault with friend Herity. The address was very good as far as it goes but it did not go far enough. When one leaves an honorable profession like the newspaper and joins the Chamber of Commerce he is apt to become a hero worshipper and forget his early "hew to the line and let the chips fall where they will" policy. Here in California the members of the Chamber of Commerce are classed with the bankers and that is at the foot of the class.

Los Angeles is suffering from acute indigestion caused by an overdose of broken down Ford cars and their broke owners. The Chamber of Commerce is blamed for advertising the city too well. It is a tourist city and we want tourists, but they must bring money with them. In other words paying tourists. Now the Chamber of Commerce is advertising for those who are looking for work not to come as they be disappointed. It's too late. The people of the east won't believe the Chamber of Commerce and they are still coming. Many with the State of Arizona end of gas. Their tanks are filled free and they go to the line in California. Arizona doesn't want them. This should be a lesson for Belleville Chamber of Commerce to heed.

Your readers will naturally wonder what California has to do with the Lincoln address. Read on reading and you will find out.

address was given to the young men of the Baptist Church. The writer does not want them to go out and try to be a Lincoln. True there are a great many white slaves to be set free but war is not the right way to settle anything. The last one had not made the world safe for the Grits or Tories. Lincoln should have paid the slave owners for the slaves and sent them back to Africa. It would have been cheaper and saved a lot of bloodshed. By the stroke of pen Lincoln gave the black man equality with the whites when he had 1900 years' start of them. Lincoln was not a member of the Baptist Church. He never joined any church. The war was won not by Lincoln but Grant with the help of a lot of Canadians. When the war was over Grant said to Lincoln, What are we going to do with these ex-slaves. They are free but broke and no place to go. Lincoln said "they will have to root hog or die." The Negro is still a problem in the United States and is daily getting a bigger one. He shows his loyalty to Lincoln and votes the straight Republican ticket when he can get a chance. In the south if he goes near a polling booth he is chased away. In the north he has a better chance but he is isolated. Lincoln's birthday, Feb. 12th was celebrated by the black people. It was not on account of any love for Lincoln, it gave them an excuse for not giving out any money. If he came back today he would find it just as hard to get any money out of the blacks as the rest of the common people.

Now Mr. Editor, to show you that Mr. Herity and your correspondent are the best of pals, I am going to give him some material for his next address. A great many are wondering who will be the next President of the United States. It is generally known that President Roosevelt is slipping rapidly. The late W. J. Bryan was a foe of Tammany Hall all through his political life. He would have no dealings with it. He didn't want to support. The President made a mistake in appointing Postmaster James Farley. He was an asset before election. Now he is a liability. The U.S.A. has more Irish postmasters today than at any time in its history. It is said that the usual Tammany tricks are used in getting Democratic postmasters appointed. Senator Huey Long is a Baptist from Louisiana. He is causing President Roosevelt many sleepless nights for his attacks on Postmaster Farley. One year ago Huey Long was considered a joke. Yet today he is looked on as the next President. He will lead a third party and all the Democrats detest, the Ultonians, and Sinclair followers will give him a tremendous majority. He has the gift of the gab. Expressions like "soak the rich" is a popular slogan. Huey Long says he will make the smart boys share their marbles. There are Huey Long Clubs in California with many members. They are on the air daily and Huey's book "Every Man A King" is a best seller.

The members of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce will enjoy this letter and I hope will discuss it at their next meeting. If it creates a lot of hearty laugh so much the better. We need a lot of laughs these days of depression and oppression. Then if you come out to look back a few years when W. C. Mikel got all the laughs from by telling Darius Gree nand his flying machine. They are flying today. A mail plane is passing over the house now and will be in San Diego in an hour. We will never be able to estimate the loss caused by our genial ex-magistrate leaving the field of humor for the law. He is one of many lawyers and only one Will Rogers.

Smiling yours,
W. S. MacDiarmid,
Los Angeles, California.

YOUTH GIVES LIFE TO AVIATION

Twenty-two-year old Floyd Davis, Detroit parachute jumper, invented a new glider device he called the "bat-swing". Trying it out at Bishop airport, Flint, Mich., with his father and mother looking on, he fell 6,000 feet to his death. These dramatic pictures tell the story. The young martyr to aviation is pictured at top, wearing his device; centre, kissing his mother before the takeoff, with his father Leroy Davis at right, and below, at the end of his heroic journey. Airport officials expressed the belief the rip cord on Davis' parachute became tangled and would not open.

By TOM GILL

The twilight deepened. Suddenly the little mare gave slight, and ears forward, and the wind, that raised her mane, brought to the dim game trail that led down into the country beneath. Still Kowah made no move save to lay the cheek of a horse's head against a rock near and listen. Then, silently as mountain air, dig he rose slowly to his stirrups and drew the rifle softly from its leather scabbard.

But almost at once the rifle was thrust back, and with a low cry Dick urged the mare forward, for there, picking her way down the jagged rocks, Nora Cowan loomed him through the gathering dusk of ness. He dismounted at sight of him her eyes lost their look of weary anxiety and changed with sudden deliverance from these hours of anxiety left her weak and trembling in the saddle, and when she raised one hand to her eyes.

"Thank God you're safe," she breathed, then with sudden apprehension looked up at him. "Dick, you not hurt?"

He smiled away her fears. "Not a bit. I'm all right."

"At least a hundred men are after you."

He laughed. "I know. Their tracks are all about here."

She reached his arm to reassure herself. "Will one? I have been frantic ever since Kowah left. Then he has brought news that you've been shot or taken." Deeper fears have gone to see the Governor. But they are too many for you, Dick. You must leave. You are many for you here, and food. With it you can ride across to the mountains and get out of the country. You mustn't stay here. I won't—won't it. There, I'll be quiet," she gulped against tears. "They'll come any minute. It's like a living nightmare. I've been sitting and every moment dreading Bull Pedro in with them. I've had to hold out only the barest hope for you. But now that you're here—"

"Softly, little Nora." Gently he looked down at her. "I can't go now. I can and will help you, but I'd be hunting a half dozen job, and the first thing I'd know I'd be dead."

Then, eager to change the subject he asked, "How you have been lowed?"

She shook her head. "I've been riding nearly every day as there was nothing unusual in my coming out toward the hills. I've been busy watching Dick and will and every movement Lolita makes. I'm the only one who could come without suspicion."

CHAPTER THIRTY-THREE

Reaching in the saddle pocket Nora drew out a carton of cigarettes and gave them to him. "And I'd like some food. I'm sure you need it."

"You poor kid." He lighted two cigarettes and passed one to Nora, then looked with misgiving at the darkening sky. "But you'll have to get back quickly, or you'll never make it down in the dark. Is there any one who could come without suspicion."

"You poor kid." He lighted two cigarettes and passed one to Nora, then looked with misgiving at the darkening sky. "But you'll have to get back quickly, or you'll never make it down in the dark. Is there any one who could come without suspicion."

Smiling she shook her head. "I haven't the least intention of going down tonight. I'm going to stay with you and if you don't offer me a little more hospitality I'm going to curl up right here, I tell you I'm dead."

Doubtfully he looked at the trail, already crowding dim in the twilight, then at the girl beside him and turned his nose. "My nonsense they will be additional reasons for the list of crimes, but you've always had your own way with me. So follow close. It's not far."

Through the gathering dusk the two horses picked their way over the rocky trail up to where pinnacled crags hinted, like sentinels forbidding, high above them. Hard going, for they kept steadily on, yet it was almost night when they descended to a little sheltered pocket amongst the rocks, protected equally from wind and from the eyes of men by huge spires of pink granite fingers of the moonlight.

Through the darkness she saw him drew rein.

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS

DON'T BE THE VICTIM

"We're home," he called, "and now I'll show you the best hiding place in all the Southwest."

They had halted in a low amphitheatre between two ridges whose walls towered vertically above them. Dismounting, Dick led his mare between two huge cleft in the rocks that to the girl had seemed only a deeper shadow against the jagged wall. Wonderingly she followed, and gradually the passageway widened until at last he lifted her from the saddle and she stood on the rocky floor of a cavern in the living rock. Her eyes rose, but saw neither the stars, and the shadowy voice at her side commanded, "Stand here a moment."

She heard the scratch of a match and watched Dick kneeling over a pile of twigs and dried pine tree needles. Soon the crackling of a fire filled that rocky chamber, its warmth stealing gratefully out toward her, driving back the shadows so that now Nora could see she was in a large semi-circular cave half surrounded by sloping rocks far above them, and reaching only by the narrow passageway behind.

Its flickering flames revealed a thick, deep bed of pine branches covered with a blanket. Dick pointed to it and to it with a smile.

"Sleep there, my girl couch this morning, and I can already guarantee its many good qualities."

"But do you dare light this fire?"

"Outside there's not even a glow of it now this pool with the cloud of deer hunting days."

Reassured, she took the blanket from her saddle and curled up contentedly while Dick busied himself cutting the cautious strips of wood from the dead pine branches.

So in the comfort glow of the fire they ate, and later smoked seated cross-legged on that bed of fragrant pine. And perhaps because of the atmosphere's welcome warmth, or perhaps because the dangers of these past days had brought them closer than the half forgotten spell of old companionship came over them—the spell of earlier days when they had ridden hills and desert together and Nora found her heart lightening. For long hours of all their plans, of all they hoped to do. For a time it was as if the perils and ill fortune of those past few crowded weeks had never been and once more the reminders of Dick's real home were happy and free from care back in Virginia's beloved hills. For in that brief space he was no longer a fugitive hunted on every side by the distant and aloof, separated by that unseen but ever present barrier. But somehow in the soft alchemy of the firelight they were boy and girl together, the world before them secure and friendly, and all life's duties to do—with as they chose.

Drowsily in the silence above them the night wind murmured, and presently Dick watched the girl while she talked in that thoughtful, confiding tone of hers, her dark, slanting eyes fixed on the fire, her thick hair burnished with little flecks of gold that flashed into innumerable points of flame.

Again for a fleeting second the memory of O'Hearn's insolence, his cruelty, his malicious, possessive air pierced Dick, and suddenly he came to him with a sense of sonorous. He had always known that whatever life now held for him, Nora would never be part of it—save matter except this calm cyed, low-voiced girl at his side.

An impulse within was driving him to speak to end the intolerable doubts, but all at once he broke down the barrier that had risen between them. Like a formless ghost Restlessly he walked with quick silent tread up and down the rocky floor, then slowly and reluctantly, bringing the dreary knowledge that there was still a fugitive from the world's justice, a pariah repudiated by his father, without a home, without the right to love or even to speak of love.

Again the fire blazed higher, lighting the far arf corners, filling the cavern with a welcome glow, and little by little that bitter spell passed from him. It was starting they were together now, these precious moments made more precious by the knowledge that they might never come again, that tomorrow he must be alone, hunted, his hand against the world.

Moments passed. The fire burned more softly and died.

Musingly he looked down at her. "If I could only be sure I might always," he murmured at last. "We've been closer than—than for—" he hesitated, "for many days."

Her eyes, a little troubled, looked up at him.

He took a half step forward. "Haven't we? Haven't you felt it too?"

She nodded.

For a long moment their eyes marched each other, kindling a likeness within the man's brain, holding him irresolute and powerless before her.

Lower still the fire sank, until now only its red hard glowed in slow, regular pulsations, and the shadows clinging to his head them about, dimming all but the vague outline of her and his bewilderment of her half closed eyes. Abrobite hush had fallen, as if in this high ground where the stars seem close existed.

"Time for little girls to turn in," he said huskily, and kneeling, drew off the girl's riding boots, then lifting her in his arms, laid her upon those fragrant boughs of pine. Voiceless, trembling, she looked up at him, lips half parted as if about to speak, but he waved one, only the faint sound of her quickened breathing.

He tried to go, but in that second something within the man snapped. It was as if that very yearning had burned away all restraint, and with a low cry he kneeled and folded her in his arms. Closely he held her, motionless and unresisting, head thrown back, powerless in that tight embrace. And now, willing and willing, without knowing, her own arms rose and clung about him and quiet tears started from her eyes. His lips lowered to her lips and touched in a moment of mingled ecstasy and despair.

Sharply then the dying fire crackled, and the spell was instantaneous. With all her strength the girl thrust him from her, and for a heart beat her eyes blazed into his, and very deliberately she struck him full across the face with her open palm. Turning, she threw herself face downward, and to the man's ears came the sound of a muffled sob. Silently Dick rose and went out into the night.

Nora awoke with a feeling of strangeness and vague apprehension.

Her eyes opening saw only the gray granite walls stretching ghostlike and shadowy above her. No breath of air stirred within that tomb-like place, and through the entrance a single ray of sunlight slanted, striking the rocky floor faintly dispelling the gloom of that empty vaulted chamber. Not the least sound, and curiously she raised her head to look about her. She was alone.

Instantly the girl was fully awake and springing from her bed out of the branches. "Dick!"

No answer. Seized now with a terrible foreboding she ran through the narrow passageway to the entrance, and before her the trail stretched emptily beneath the early sun, and all about those white, lifeless cliffs towered toward the cloudless sky.

"Dick!" Often, called out only a faint echo jeered back. Irresolute she stood there, shading her eyes, scanning the dark, irregular fringe of pine beneath, then suddenly she turned.

Far down the trail a horseman was moving, too dimly seen for certain recognition, but the horse was not Dick's, or that she was sure. Motionless Nora waited, watching him climb steadily toward her through the pines. Then at last she drew a deep breath of relief, for revealed in a small spot amongst the pines she recognized Dick, riding a powerful bay and leading his own mare.

CHAPTER THIRTY-FOUR

Catching sight of her white shift afar, he raised his hand in silent greeting, and when at last he reached her side his eyes rose questioningly to hers. But there was nothing in either Nora's face or

FOUR LITTLE SOLDIERS ALL IN A ROW

II Duce of Italy has decreed that every boy in that country have a military education of some sort, starting from the age of four. So here are four four-year-olds in their epic and span uniforms of the new-fy-formed "Figli Della Lupe" (sons of the Roman wolf), the organization which will train them for four years. At the age of six the youngsters automatically enter the Balilla, or young Fascist group. Mussolini is taking no chances on a shortage of soldiers.

manner to recall the happenings of the night before. It was as if she chose to put that night from her, to count it among the things that had never been, and again, Dick saw, she had drawn about her that unconquerable veil of aloofness, He stood looking down at her, waiting for her to speak.

"I just awoke and found you were not here. I was afraid," she said simply, then her eyes passed from him to the bay mare duly shod and bearing Sari's brand.

He smiled at the question in her eyes, "I paid a little midnight visit to Friend Nicholas' stables. You see every one of Sari's bloodhounds will be looking for a rider on a gray mare, and I don't want to make it too easy for them. Besides, there's going to be long, hard riding ahead for me, and mighty light rations." His appreciative eyes glanced with approval at the powerful body of the horse. "This fellow has many a mile in him before he tires."

With affrighted eyes she stepped closer. "You went down there, put yourself in their hands?"

"Why not? I may even give those fellows the honor of supporting me during my temporary role of desperado." He laughed. "I'm not now careless they are! Last night I could have set fire to the stables, shot a half a dozen of them, or played any of the demanding pranks that would have occurred to a really thirsty for blood. But this morning with her to see to them I'm taking pains that the sooner Nora left for the lower country the safer for both of them."

"I'll take your mare to my ranch," she said as they smoked a last cigarette before the end.

So before the sun was well above the rim of the desert they were following that winding trail down through the pines toward the lower range of foothills. That last night insisted on coming with her to see that this ranging point was where it would be same for her to ride forth.

Carefully they searched the long expanse beneath, but it was yet too early for signs of activity at the ranch, and in the distance where the rising sun not a single horse, not a sign of any man moved throughout the breadth of the desert. Pieced with this moment of parting, Dick felt a thrill of peril.

At last she looked up. "I'll come again, Dick—soon. It's safer for me to come than for you. I'll be back."

But Dick shook his head. "It's not safe for any of you, Nora. Better wait, and some night I'll ride down to see you."

But even as he spoke Dick knew she was not to be dissuaded, and in his heart he knew he did not want to dissuade her. Sober judgment warned him that she herself might become involved, might be made to suffer, and he knew only too clearly how Sari and Lolita would seek to hold over this girl, the sister of his enemy. Still Dick hesitated. For the thought of seeing her again, of being with her for only for a little while, the desire to learn what was taking place down there in that world from which he had been so completely severed, overweighed all those dictates of prudence, and at last he only said. "Better not, Nora."

She shrugged. "But it's perfectly safe. I'll wait until it is safe. What can they do to me? The only thing is not to endanger you. Besides," she smiled, "you'll be out of smokes by then, so don't try to look so disapproving. I can leave the ranch before dawn some day and reach you. And I may have news before then."

Then, suddenly serious, she added, "Dick, promise me you'll stay up here and out of sight until then. No more raids on Sari's stable and no more gambling with fate until I see you. Promise?"

He looked down at her hungrily, this hunted, lonely man, and behind the long, level gaze she might have read a message that he forbade his lips to speak. It may be she did read that message, for her own eyes softened and the fingers on his sleeve tightened for a brief moment. Then she turned away.

"Good luck," she called softly back, and rode forward into the bright morning.

He watched her slowly descending on his mare, and his eyes scanning again that great expanse of sand and chaparral, found nothing here to disturb him. All the world seemed at peace on that glittering late winter morning. Yet Dick knew that down there, somewhere among the foothills, men were camped and already stirring, were coming another day of the merciless hunt in which he played the part of quarry and he knew that the hunt would persist, goaded on by all Sari's power and hate, until, in one way or another, the end should come.

Then again his eyes fell to the slender figure of Nora. If only—impatiently he shrugged and raised his reins.

At the turn beneath the girl looked back and waved for the last time and Dick raised his own hand high in answer, then silently made his solitary way back among the pines.

REPEAT COMEDY TO ASSIST V.O.N.

Minerva Chapter, O. E. S. Again Present 'Chintz Cottage'

Repeating their comedy success, "Chintz Cottage" last evening to aid the work of the Victorian Order of Nurses, Minerva Chapter No. 138, O.E.S. delighted an audience in the Orange Hall with the presentation of this amusing play, directed by Miss Mildred Lloyd, the play was splendidly enacted by the clever cast.

The plot, which is somewhat humorous, concerned two eventful days at a cottage in the moors, leased by an attractive London society girl for peace and quiet. The "something" sumi and her nervous maid find things anything but serene, due to their rather vivid imaginations. The sum is sure that her niece has eloped with a Texan and tries to find the groom, a mysterious stranger answering her purpose. The stranger is in the act of their only neighbour and has been injured and brought into the cottage by its fair tenant, Minny. Mixed conjectures up a plan which this boy has been the victim and his father the would-be murderer. But the plot disappears into thin air when it is learned that Peter had been struck by a golf ball, his father having made a record drive from his golf course, quite unknown.

Miss Bessie Hart was Minty, the society girl and was very charming. Mrs. Bert Orr was Sumi, with her buckle was Fanny, her maid, and gave a hilarious interpretation of this difficult and nervous temperation. As Aggie Tillingtop, Mrs. Cooper was splendid as Minty's aunt, whose efficiency appealed to her absent minded neighbour to such an extent that he proposed to her, and to marry him. The absent minded Tillingtop was very convincingly portrayed by Mr. Walter McNeily. Mr. Bert Orr was Peter Kent, the poet and Mr. Percy Cooper was Jerry, a part with sincerity. He and his stepmother, Mrs. Tillingtop, played by Mrs. gan, had rather arduous roles, necessitating much climbing in and out of hedges. Mrs. A. Wesley Nacott was Mrs. Dean and was splendid in the humorous obstacles of the Kent household, greatly relieved at thoughts of turning over her charges to Mrs. Tillingtop.

The action of the play took place in the garden of the cottage, an unusually attractive stage setting? Before the play opened, Miss Mildred Lloyd announced the thanks of the V.O.N. to all who assisted in the program.

A closeup of the newest wonder of the American Museum of Natural History and Albino pearl frog with pink eyes, so rare, say scientists, it is more unusual than the famous leopards of Canada. Dr. C. Kingsley Nolin curator at the museum, said that the frog, which was brought to New York by two visitors to St. Lawrence County, New York State, was the first Albino specimen of Rana Clamitans he had ever seen. He also said it was his belief that the Albino tadpole frog is looked upon, scientifically, as a conspicuous mutation, representing an almost diagrammatic step in the mechanism of evolution. The frog will be given the best care and food, living in a special glass container as in cool flowing water and being fed on the larvae of a species of moth.

Daily Short Story

"Two Kinds of Love"

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

The Mr. fishing is an art to the good fisherman, the same as a good painting is a work of art to the artist. Course you don't have to be a genius to be a good fisherman, like you do to be a good painter, but—even so—fishing requires time and patience, too.

Of course, anybody can jerk a measely cold minnow out of the water, but when it comes to catching tunas and the larger variety of fish that's where the art of fishing comes in.

An artist feller, Jim Trader, and a good one too, came down for his vacation, that's why I thought I'd mention about the artist and fishing at the beginning of the story. The feller about whom I'm writin' could be seen flitting then speaking to the artist terms when talking about fishing.

Jim was a whale of a fisherman as well as a good artist but a little uncouthed about his fishing and his way with women. Jim went at his fishing serious. Jim was an artist the same as his profession. I can't remember the crazy way I handled that tuna the day we first went outside. It was a pleasure just to watch.

Jim wasn't down here two days before he met Maude Hankins, the town's beauty. She was cute as a picture bowed looking but she had a picture-book trailed along with me on fishing trips. Well, as I said, it was two days before Jim met her. On that Saturday she came over to my shack for my weekly fishing trip, and I introduced her to Jim. His sentiment raised a shade as eyes took in the trim figure which he undeniably with one hand resting upon the back of my chair.

The stems of us went out that day. I glanced quickly several times that day at Maude and each time I saw her staring at Jim. I knew Maude was engaged to John Hardy but that nice fellow over town, and also knew Jim's reputation with women. But it appeared to me that the girl was falling for Jim. I might be wrong but I knew the signs.

Love in Bloom

It wasn't two days later that I saw the pair motoring together. Then the same night when I went down to the beach for a little surf casting I met them on the boardwalk arm in arm. Fishing that night I couldn't help thinking about John. Wondered how the boy was taking it. You know, it's no fun losing a fellow along and then your girl—especially when you're engaged. Right then I decided to go over and see John. Just then I got a tile and after a good fight landed a big kingfish. So, I thought I would stick around for awhile. The upshot of it was I didn't get around to see John until the morning.

John was down painting his rowboat when I came around. After a few casual remarks I asked him point blank about him and Maude. Well, he hemmed and hawed about it, but I could see he didn't like it none.

Not getting any place I decided to drop over and see Maude. She was just leaving the house for the beach when I arrived.

"What about the artist feller," I began.

"I don't you just love artists," she replied. "Besides, I want to find out about life before I marry and settle down—and John he'll be all right."

She skipped away to the beach to meet Jim, I guess.

I went back to my shack to think. The way things were going weren't so good. I knew that Jim didn't love the girl and never did. But by this time, I guess, Maude thought Jim did.

Fate Takes Hand

Well, it looked like did reliable here would have to come to the rescue somehow—but how was the problem. There was only one way I could think. But before I could use my plan, fate took a hand.

The next morning Maude came over to my shack early. She breakfast dishes were still in the sink and she offered to wash them. I said all right because I had to go outside to fix one of my poles. I seated myself near the door and went to work. I'll be before Jim came over.

He didn't know that Maude was in the kitchen as we spoke. I finally led the conversation around to Maude and somehow.

Boy, this was better than my plan. Every word could be heard by Maude. I noticed she had stopped washing the dishes and was just listening. I said:

"Are you in love with Maude?"

"Well, I'll tell you, old timer, he said. "I dont love any women—that is—I mean, I don't ever marry them. Love them and leave them is my motto."

Well, he left shortly after tiffin. I hurried into the kitchen but Maude was gone. It made them an hour later when Maude and John drove up—he happy as a lark but still had a frightened gleam on his forehead. All Maude said—but she had a stranger look in her eyes when she said it, was:

"John and I are going to be married next week—are you coming to the wedding?"

Little Benny's Note Book

Mr. and Mrs. Howe came over last nite to play bridge with pop and me, and they was sitting around tawking first, ma saying, "Tell the Howes about little Nora Rose and her glass of milk, William.

Nora Rose being my sister Gladdiss little girl, and pop said, "You tell them, it will save you the trouble of interrupting my story to correct the facts, pronto and without delay," and ma said, Now Willyum, you tell a story as well, go ahead and tell it, I'll correct you if you tell it, Willyum.

Well, pop started to, saying, Well, you see little Nora Rose has an aversion to milk, although naturally by it's quite a common item in her diet, since she's just 3 years of age.

She's not quite 3 yet, Willyum, not till June, ma said, and pop said, the voice of the back seat driver is heard in the land. I don't seem to remember this story, I'll tell you about the time I was taken for a pickpocktt in a crowded trolley car, he said.

Now Willyum go on with the story, of course you remember, dont be absurd, ma said, and pop said, Well last Sunday at breakfast little Nora Rose's glass of milk was set in front of her as usual.

Lunch time, Willyum, not breakfast, ma said, and pop said, I'm getting it all wrong, what's a use, I'll tell you about the time I was terrfied under a landslide with a Skotchman, an Irishman and a Sweed.

Now Willyum the folks want to hear the story about Nora Rose and her glass of milk, ma said, and pop said, Then go ahead and tell them.

With ma did, being about Nora Rose wanting to know if the milk couldn't be pored back in the cow.

Not seeming like much of a story, and this morning at breakfast I asked pop about the time he was took for a pickpocktt and the time he was berried under a landslide, and he said nothing one hadn't happened yet and he's just dreading the time when they do.

Public Consistory For Canonization

Vatican City, April 4 (CP-Havas) —A public consistory for the canonization of the blessed Sir Thos. More and Cardinal John Fisher was held today with His Holiness presiding.

The Dean of the consistory lawyers, speaking in Latin, asked Pope Pius XI to canonize the two famous English Catholic history. Mgr. Bacci, Papal Secretary, replied in the same language in the name of the Pope.

Mother and Daughter Relieved of Skin Disease

As Good For Eczema as For Simple Injuries

"We have used Zam-Buk for over 25 years in fact, ever since my girlhood days in Lancashire, England, my little girl's scalp was all broken out in eczema—it was a dreadful thing, with her head being so sore and painful I had to comb the hair and then gently apply it to her hair with a soft brush. This took me a long time, in two or three days time it began to show by improvement and after the use of Zam-Buk removed the disease entirely. Last summer my little girl's legs were swollen from the knees down and the skin all dery scruffy red. Again Zam-Buk proved a real friend in need and soon rid me of the trouble. I always have Zam-Buk by me in the house."—Mrs. A. Bentley, 3378 Jolicite Street, Montreal.

"Living on a farm, where nasty accidents are always happening, I find Zam-Buk handy. We often get cut and bruised on the hands and feet Zam-Buk is always swiftly soothing and healing."—C. Barratt, Fareham E.O., Alberta.

The success of Zam-Buk as a healer of skin troubles lies in its original and valuable formula. Zam-Buk is compounded from certain extracts of herbal origin. These, scientifically blended, attain the maximum of soothing, healing, and antiseptic power.

Zam-Buk is so refined that it soaks through the tiny pores into underlying tissues. It reaches from below as well as on the surface. It allays pain and itching, and aids in the growth of new skin. Zam-Buk gets at the root of such troubles as eczema, salt rheum, bad legs, ulcers, scalp disease, poisoned wounds, etc. It is also a splendid remedy for piles and a fine allround first-aid for injuries. Zam-Buk Ointment 50c box, Zam-Buk Medicinal Soap 25c cake.

Lightfully but tactfully Pat silenced Rogger's eager love-making, believing it but a mood inspired by their lovely surroundings. Marriage she would not think of—yet; she had just begun to live. Besides, she not could desert her father, who so needed her.

And Roger, determined, did not press the subject, nor did this memorable night break their close friendship. In the city of the peacock throne, days thrilled Pat with new and astonishing sights. She wrote frequent letters to her father.

They told of strange crowds, street bazaars and incredible magic of wonder-working fakirs. In Jodhpur, Captain Cazzy, reading of her pleasure, did not write back that his regiment was entraining for the north.

He was to join the forces ordered to quell the fierce mutinous uprising. Unfortunately, Captain Cazzy believed fighting would soon cease. The third day of their stay in Delhi, Lady Cecil received a startling telegram, ordering her at once to summon her son.

This is startle is not an unprecedented occurrence, but he declared he almost doubted the evident of his own eyes yesterday, when he found a field egg in the hen's nest.

The Culbertsons assumed their commanding position by winning seven of the eight rubbers played in the day's only session yesterday afternoon.

Cambridge Wins 12th Successive Race

Stylish Light Blues Race Into Lead in First Minute Of Classic Never Headed

Oxford Unable to Match Strokes With Cambridge Crew

MANY LINE COURSE

Cambridge Finishes Four Lengths in Front in Slow Time

Putney, England, April 6.—(CP Cable)—For the 12th year in succession Cambridge entered Oxford in the Classic Varsity Boat race this afternoon.

The stylish Light Blue eight got off at the start of the 4 1-4 mile grind slightly behind the stronger Oxford crew but within a minute had drawn even and never headed.

The victory made the tally in the historic contest 43 wins for Cambridge 40 for Oxford and one dead heat.

The Cambridge eight finished four lengths ahead. At one time during the race Light Blue in front of Oxonians but they eased up nearing the finish and crossed the line covering 30 to the minute, Oxford, after keeping within striking distance for more than half the course, dropped back to 28 strikes on the end.

The officials said Cambridge's winning margin was 4 1-2 lengths. The time was 19 minutes, 42 seconds, far above the record established by Cambridge last year of 18 minutes, three seconds.

Cambridge Wins Toss

Cambridge winner of the race for the past eleven years, won the toss and elected to take the Surrey side of the course as the 8711 Surrey boat race with Oxford got under way this afternoon.

A cold wind mostly from the west blew. And the water was slightly rough. Owing to the winding nature of the 4 1-4 mile stretch the wind was a headwind in parts.

Oxford has not won a race since 1923 but just before the start Skipper Mc Mosley, president of the Oxford Rowing Club, declared "we're not suffering from any inferiority complex."

The starting gun was fired at 2.47 p.m. and the crews were away.

Oxford got away from the front at a rate of 36 strokes to the minute but the light blues soon crept into the lead and at the boat houses Cambridge had a half length lead.

The light blues got away at the same rate, the heavier Oxford crew, 36 to the minute.

After one minute's rowing Cambridge pulled a length ahead, and Oxford a half length astern.

Ottawa, April 6—Sentence of death shall not be passed on any female person, under any of the provisions of this act," is one of the striking amendments to the Criminal Code proposed by T. Ahearn, Independent member for East Toronto.

It is also provided that "on a trial by jury of a female person under any section of this act, one-third of the jurors chosen to try the issue shall be females, duly qualified on the same basis as male jurors."

Just as the House adjourned last night Mr. Church filed his proposed amendments with the clerk. Bill 3 —an act to amend the Criminal Code—has been referred to Committee of the Whole to consider amendments.

KILLER BANDIT EASILY CAPTURED

Raymond Hamilton is Arrested in City Where Crime Career Began

Dallas, Tex., Apr. 6.—Raymond Hamilton, notorious killer and former partner of the late Clyde Barrow, was re-captured late yesterday by Texas Rangers at Fort Worth. The bragging little bandit, who escaped from the death cell on the Huntsville penitentiary last July 22 while awaiting execution for murder, was captured without a fight.

Fort Worth police and the officers from the Dallas county sheriff's office surprised him as he stood in a Fort Worth freight yard and he put up his hands without hesitation.

He was brought immediately to Dallas to be charged as the criminal career as a child by stealing a playmate's toy wagon.

Officers said he would be returned to the Huntsville penitentiary where the electric chair is awaiting him.

Captured with him was a companion, who gave the name of Glen Allen of Springfield, Ill.

Hamilton faces prison sentences totaling 362 years as well as a death in the electric chair sentence. He escaped from the prison from pretext theft to murder before he was 22 years ago.

WANT TO DECLARE CONTRACT INVALID

Alvinston, Ont., April 6 (CP) — Peters Overholt, Alvinston, who operates a truck to Queen's Park to find out if this village might follow the Ontario Government and declare the contract with the Hydro Commission invalid today declared some of the reasons why he would like to see this action taken.

Back in 1920 the citizens voted unanimously for electric power in the Western Ontario village, despite a warning from the commission that the power lines would have to take a circuitous route and the cost would be high. The cost per horsepower is now $150 per year, the highest in the province.

The village has not been able to finance the cost of the line to the commission and is going into debt.

DEATHS YESTERDAY

Rome — Cardinal Locatelli, 79, member of the Vatican's diplomatic service for nearly 40 years.

Great Britain Plays Role Of Europe's Peacemaker On Arming Continent

Capt. A. Eden Refers to Difficulties of Present Situation

FRANKNESS REQUIRED

Britain's Major Job at Stresa to Hold Back French Resolution

London, April 6 (CP)—Plans for a great London conference at which all European nations would join in a united effort to solve the security problem were understood to be crystallizing here today.

This conference, qualified quarters announced, is being arranged as a sequel to the Anglo-Franco-Italian meeting at Stresa, Italy, next Thursday.

Great Britain would continue the role of mediator at this all-European meeting with Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald presiding, these quarters said.

Reserve of Prudence

Although officials refused either to confirm or deny such a conference was afoot their reserve was attributed rather to prudence than to any objections to such a meeting.

Capt. Anthony Eden, British Lord Privy Seal, who returned to London last night from his peace and security talks in European capitals was reported to have struck a hopeful note to the premiership at the Prime Minister, according to the Daily Telegraph, holds the belief that situation is not serious and that the dangers of serious conflagration are less than generally or even generally imagined." The newspaper declared he was known to have informed Whitehall officials both Germany and Poland might be persuaded to be objectional to the proposed "Eastern Locarno."

French Statesman Out

He urged Great Britain's foreign policy must be "frank and firm and stalwart" as he alighted at Victoria Station.

"No one who's been on such a journey can doubt the reality, the formidable character of the difficulties of the present European situation," he added, maintaining, however, they are "not insuperable."

Britain's major job at the Stresa Conference next week will be to try to keep a Franco-Italian front demning German rearmament from wrecking the work of the British ministers who have moved thru' Europe's capitals in the last week in search of a peace formula, it was said.

It was feared too strong a protest would increase the tension which already exists between Italy and Capt. Eden have sought to relieve.

It became clear to informed quarters that this French protest from the road during discussing at the conference among diplomats of Britain, France and Italy.

60,000 MEN

Paris, April 5 (CP)—Sixty thousand soldiers belonging to the class which was due to leave the army April 15 will be kept under the colors until July 14, under a decision reached today by the National Council.

The class originally contained 240,000 men but exemptions made in favor of those serving a postponement of their term of office for reasons, brought the total down to approximately half this number.

The men kept under colors will be used to guard frontiers and defence organizations, and will not be exempted from part of their ordinary reserve duty. While July

WINTER CREW OF SEVEN AT MINE BELIEVED KILLED

Trail Blazer Finds One Buried in Huge Snow Slide

OBLITERATED CAMP

Supplies Have to be Flown in Over Rocky Passes

Victoria, April 6—(CP)— Seven men comprising the entire winter crew operating the Tasko-Motherlode mining property in the Tasko Lake country of British Columbia are believed to have been killed in a snow slide, which occurred several days ago, according to word, which has just reached the outside.

Bill Allaire, who operates a trail line in the Tasko country, snowshoed over the Waterfall Pass into Bridge River Valley to tell he had discovered evidence of the tragedy and found the body of one man.

He found, on visiting the Tasko Motherlode property that a slide had come down the mountains and obliterated the camp. He dug into the debris and uncovered the frozen body of a man. Unable to do anything further he left it to the ministrations of civilization.

The Tasko-Motherlode property is difficult of access except in summer, where it may be reached by pack-horse trails from Minto City in the Bridge River Valley or southwest by a more difficult path from Goldenville by way of Chilko Lake.

Supplies for mining operations were flown in last summer and fall. Provincial Police will investigate tragedy.

The district is in central British Columbia, about 150 miles north of Vancouver.

MAGRATH WRITES MAYOR SIMPSON

Suggests Readjustment of Power Contracts With Quebec

TORONTO, April 6.—(CP)— C. A. Magrath, former chairman of the Ontario Hydro Commission, today suggested a readjustment of the commission's contracts with Quebec Power Companies instead of the Ontario Government's Legislation declaring them illegal.

In a letter to Mayor James Simpson, chairman of the Toronto section of the Ontario Municipal Electrical Association, Mr. Magrath states if Stewart Lyon, present Commission chairman, "feels some apprehension about the early future, I would like to see him call upon his engineers with a financial expert to explore the possibilities of a satisfactory readjustment whereby the commission could obtain advantages more than sufficient to compensate for the payment in the next few years of the unused power and accomplish it without the necessity for new negotiations to those power companies."

The letter was written by Mr. Magrath in response to a telegram from Mayor Simpson asking his views.

DUKES THREATEN TO LEAVE LOOP

Oshawa Protests Holding up of Transfer to Doug Mays

(By Staff Reporter)

Kitchener, April 6—A serious situation has developed in the Central Ontario Baseball League with the refusal of the O.B.A.A. in session today refusing the transfer of Douglas Mays to Oshawa until O.B.A.A. the Oshawa Ball Club threatening to withdraw from the C.O.B.L. if the transfer is not made so that Mays can play from the opening of the season on May 24th.

Early today the session in conclave granted Gilbards "A" team of Napanee and champions of that section last year a new date for Provincial playdowns because no league can be formed in this district for this class of ball. If Oshawa refuses to come in the C.O.B.L. on account of the transfer of Mays being held up, it may change the situation entirely for the Napanee team. James Barclay, who will do the recruiting for the Belleville senior ball club this summer was granted his life certificate after the fact he had been presented to the O.B.A.A. executive.

Robinson, U. S. Poet Dies, Called Life Kindergarten

New York, Apr. 6 (AP)—Edwin Arlington Robinson, thrice winner of the Pulitzer prize and honored as the "foremost living poet in the United States", died early today.

Robinson, who has been ill with pneumonia, died at 1 a.m. (E.S.T.) at the Roosevelt hospital since January 17 for treatment of a chronic ailment. He underwent surgery on January 29 and Wednesday suffered a relapse.

Robinson, to whom the world was "a kind of spiritual kindergarten", was forced to submerge his literary ambition for years in popular jobs.

He was born in Head The, Maine, December 22, 1869. He attended public schools and went to Harvard University for five years. The illness of his father compelled him to leave the school and then came the serious business of making a living.

Recognition came to him slowly, but when it did come he was enthusiastically acclaimed by critics and public.

He received the Pulitzer Prize in 1922 for his "Collected Poems" and in 1925 for "The Man Who Died Twice" and in 1927 for "Dionysius Lyricus", which became a best seller.

In 1922 Yale University awarded Robinson the Doctor of Letters as the "foremost living poet", while Harvard conferred upon Robinson's philosophy. Once a critic wrote "his humour is of a grim sort and the world is not beautiful to him, but a prison house."

"I am sorry to learn that I have painted myself in such lugubrious colors," Robinson said in a letter to a friend. "I do not think I am a pessimist. I have always regarded life as a kindergarten where millions of bewildered infants are trying to spell 'God' with the wrong blocks."

350,000 in Active Army

Today's decision will keep the active army stationed in France up to 350,000 trained men for the next three months.

By that time it was expected that the 180,000 conscripts due to enter the army immediately after Easter will have been sufficiently trained to take their place in the ranks.

The decision was reached at a meeting of ministers presided over by President Albert Lebrun. It followed the advice of the Supreme War Council which met yesterday and considered measures necessary to keep France strong in the face of a rearming Germany.

The general staff was in favor of maintaining the men under colors for 18 months but it eventually allotted for training a new class, but the government decided three months was enough.

Negotiations Are Broken Down Between Italy And Ethiopia

(Copyright 1935 by the Asso. Press)

Addis Ababa, April 6 (AP)—Hard working Haile Selassie, Emperor of Ethiopia, confirmed today in an interview that his nation has broken off negotiations with Italy in the East African dispute but emphatically denied "war" has been declared on either side.

Followed by three cocker spaniels and a servant carrying a red umbrella—sign of the master's power as descendant of the Queen of Sheba—the Emperor received his interviewer in a library of the palace where he gave a terse but complete statement of the Halo-Ethiopian diplomatic situation:

"We have tried to negotiate directly with Italy, or through an intermediary. Unfortunately Italy has declined arbitration and has not replied to our proposals, therefore we have broken off negotiations and submitted the matter to Geneva."

The Emperor's brief words in response to a question afforded a summary of an abortive attempt of Italian and Ethiopian representatives to reach a decision regarding re-

Hydro Contract Repudiations

The Investors Dealers' Association of Canada have issued the following statement:

To All Investors:

"Every fair minded person must regard the proposed expulsion of Hydro directors, without permitting recourse to the Courts as an affront to the Province of Ontario, and a threat to the welfare and security of every taxpayer.

"It constitutes an act of bad faith—and business cannot function promptly in such an atmosphere. No person can continue to be prosperous if he does not pay his burdensome obligations and neither can the Province of Ontario. We owe it to our duty to acquaint you with our stand and we urge you to add your protest to this destructive proposal.

"The destruction of values entailed by killing security quotations is serious enough—because, these values are the basis of loans, the collateral of all classes of citizens. The contraction of market-ability by killing costs of borrowing, the disillusionment of Canadian and foreign investors following the secret passage of the legislation must inevitably stir you and us to action.

"If the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario wishes to be relieved of its contractual obligations and its promises to pay, surely the matter should first be tested in the Courts. To repudiate obligations is neither fair nor wise.

"We cannot emphasize too strongly our belief that this matter is as much your concern as that of any investor, for it is among the most unfavorable consequences that can flow from arbitrary expulsion.

"Only the united protest of those who see the dangers in the Bill before the Legislature can stay the passage. Insidiously it is undermining our credit at home and abroad. Canadian recovery and re-employment cannot proceed in the face of such odds.

"We respectfully urge that you telegraph or write your protest immediately to Premier Hepburn, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, and to your local member of the Provincial Legislature.

"Yours very truly,
"The Investment Dealers' Association of Canada,
"J. A. Kingsmill,
"Secretary."

Prayer of Jubilee

By Thomas T. Champion.

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, April 6 (CP)—Canada and other parts of the British Empire will be interested in the "Form of Prayer and Thanksgiving to Almighty God for the Recovery" of His Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council for the Church of England, Church of St. Paul on May 6th and in other churches throughout the land on the said day or the ensuing Sunday."

The service opens with the first verse of the National Anthem followed by the hymn, "All People That on Earth do Dwell." After versicles and responses there will be the familiar 95th Psalm, with which morning prayer usually opens in the Church of England. Psalm 121 follows, and then two short lessons from both old and new testaments. Afterwards the hymn, "I Vow to Thee My Country," or "City of God, how broad and far" will be sung. Then comes the address, and the Prayer of Thanksgiving which is provided follows:

It is very meet, right, and our bounden duty that we should give thanks unto Thee, O Lord, Holy Father, Almighty, Everlasting God, for that Thou wast pleased as on this day to set Thy Servant our Sovereign Lord King George upon the Throne of this Realm and heal preserve him in days of sickness and of health throughout his reign of five and twenty years. For in these years of unceasing service set by him by our gracious Queen Mary, for strength and steadfastness he answered to him and set him at ease in years of war and of manifold anxieties; for the love and loyalty borne to him by a great family of peoples in all parts of the world, we laud and magnify Thy Glorious Name. We bless Thee for increase in the knowledge of Thy marvellous works, in care for those who suffer from sickness or the lack of work, in desire that all men everywhere may live in peace and enjoy the fruits of their labor. For these and all other Thy mercies vouchsafed in Jesus Christ our Lord, we yield Thee unfeigned thanks; through Jesus Christ Our Lord, to whom with Thee in the unity of the Holy Spirit we all honor and glory now and for ever. Amen.

After a short litany and further prayers either the Te Deum or the Doxology will be sung. After the blessing the service concludes with the first and last verses of the National Anthem.

The whole service is expected to last about an hour. The Archbishop of Canterbury will be the principal officiant at St. Paul's. His Grace will be assisted by the Bishop of London, the Dean of St. Paul's and other ecclesiastical dignitaries. The Moderator of the Free Church Council, Rev. Dr. S. M. Berry, will read one of the lessons.

sponsibility for the Unlual frontier incident and the question of reparations."

Asked concerning reports that a state of war already existed with Italy, the Emperor gave an emphatic reply.

"Fellen," he said in a loud voice, gesturing with his small hands. "Fellen" he repeated the word. In Ethiopian it means an emphatic "no."

RIVER RECOVERS SLOWER TEMPO

Most people agree that spring is here because of the return of the robins, wild geese and the drinking of hot tea. If a more doubtful lack of the old Motra were made a great many would be agreed that summer is just around the corner. The ferocity and speed of the river which come after the annual break up have decreased considerably. The water has lowered a great deal and is slowly rounding into its summer slugishness.

DISTRICT DRAMA FESTIVAL HELD

of the young people who have felt only the influence of the modern picture. It extended a welcome to Murray Bonnycastle, a graduate of the Academy, who has made a wonderful success in dramatic work in Toronto.

The Plays

The evening's program was opened by the group from Rednersville with "Green Cheese" in a presentation of the third act of the operetta. "Green Cheese" Forty young people took part, and their production represented careful musical training and real ability on the part of the cast. Trenton High School chose "A Marriage Proposal" by Anton Tchekhof, an ambitious vehicle, which was well done by the young players. Miss Mrs. "The Great Dark" by A. J. Talbot was presented by Albert College, a tense and dramatic impression of the hours of waiting by a group of miners after a disaster in a colliery and the final number was a charming and lighter play, "The Bishop's Candlestick" given by the Belleville Collegiate.

So well was each play produced that the audience was inclined to forget the youth of the actors and the variety in the program made an evening of keen enjoyment.

Adjudicator's Comments

In his remarks after the final presentation, Mr. Bonnycastle showed knowledge and understanding of stage craft and his advice should be of great assistance to the groups taking part. His general impression of the plays showed three points which needed more consideration, voice contact and character. While the voices were good, in many cases they were not enough. The actors would not word perfect in their lines, had not paid enough attention to the sounds of the words. The characters were not gone into enough and by consequence the particular referred to the fact that in a number of cases he was conscious that the actors were playing to each other, but to themselves.

The consideration of each individual play, Mr. Bonnycastle went into lengthy detail. "Green Cheese" was quite charming and he suggested more variety in position of the chorus, and more animation in their actions. Hana did quite a nice piece of work, his diction was good and there was a general feeling of vitality but the performance might be better. Johann showed a thoughtful quality in his performance but dropped out of character during the songs. Johann's father had splendid make-up but his movements were not realistic enough.

PRINCE

The principals in "Green Cheese" were Jimmy Sherriff, Harold Barnet; Johann van Rimmer, Jimmie Ward; Trini Smults, Hilma Matheson; Hana, John Munro; Frieda, Irene Tucker; Eric von Rimmer, Lorne Johnson; Peter Schultz, Reg. Matthews. The play was produced by Stirling high school, directed by Mr. Gerald Chrich.

Russian Play.

In "The Marriage Proposal", the adjudicator liked the part of Natalia and the restrained sense of comedy, the actor displayed. Lacky. Cues in gestures was advised. Natalia, was quite an interesting character, presented with a fine sense of humor. The adjudicator advised more restraint in the early part of the play so that there would be some reserve on which to build the climax. The players in "The Marriage Proposal" were: Stephen Tschubikow, Duncan Campbell; Natalia Lacky, Cues Ivanovna Lomov, Bernard Campbell, Miss Hazel Farley directed the play which was given by Trenton high school.

Mr. Bonnycastle's Remarks

Mr. Bonnycastle's was very much impressed with "Green Dark", describing it as an extremely good production. The values were there, the was the relation of one character to another, and the tempo was excellent. His found fault to criticize. The individual players were all good and the play was very highly augmented by the work of Mrs. Melling. He found her voice lovely and she sustained the part well. Mrs. Melling and Rachal handled the scene at the end of the play with considerable skill. The direction of the play was unusually good. The subdued setting of the play, the keenness and strain at the very beginning which resulted in the quietness of the quiet ending. Unless the feeling was true the whole production would have failed. The stage looked very well. This play in the opinion of the adjudicator was the best in the festival and Miss Vermilyee's the finest individual performance under the "Dark" presented by Albert College and directed by Miss Tullie had the support of Mrs. Melling, Muriel Vermilyee; Mrs. Lonax, Lurene Rogers; Mrs. Albert Dickinson, Mrs. Ryan, Catharine Smith; Mrs. Tyler, Mrs. Rachal and Reader Clegg, Nellie Matsons.

Mr. Sampson

The last word from adjudicator found charming. Caroline might have been slightly overdone, perhaps by speaking her lines in a louder voice. More care should be taken to suggest the period in the comedy play, little details of walk and movement. The general standard performance was very good but perhaps a little monotonous, although the voices were distinctive. The quality of tenderness might have been better. Bessie had a fine characterization and a more real portrayal would be interesting. Mary played with good feeling although the adjudicator had difficulty in hearing her lines. The presentation of the offering of Belleville Collegiate was highly appreciated by Mr. Sampson. Billings. Those taking part were Caroline Stevens, Dorothy Wilson, Marjorie Hamilton, Ted Fett; Mr. Sampson, Richard Logie.

The Belleville players who were responsible for the settings go much to the credit of the whole performance. They included Haddow Beard, stage manager, H. Kolesh and Miss Stanley Mere and Jack Moon — properties, Jo Creighton, Cecil Langstaff, Gordon Hayes, business manager, Miss McLaren acted as prompter and Miss Smith.

The Argyll Light Infantry Band gave a delightful program between the acts, playing selections through the kind permission of Lieut.-Col. E. Green. The band was under the direction of Lieut. Ross Hunter whose co-operation the Literary Society of the school has added considerably to the success of their entertainments.

After the program the Literary Society of the Collegiate entertained the visiting players and teachers in the Library of the School, as well as those taking part in the evening's performance, teachers from Tweed and Picton High Schools attended and it is expected that next fall a competitive festival on a larger scale will materialize, so enthusiastic were all representatives of the district.

Tea was poured at the charming-ly arranged tea table by Mrs. F. N. Logie and Mrs. P. C. MacLaurin, members of the Literary Society assisted in serving the guests, who greatly enjoyed the friendly and informal gathering.

Better Season on Great Lakes Foreseen If Industrial Uncertainty Passes

Freighters of the Great Lakes open another shipping season

By JAMES C. KINKAID
Central Press Canadian Writer

Toronto, April 6.— Sailors who go down to the Great Lakes on the freighters and passenger boats are preparing for the best year they have had since 1930—perhaps since 1929.

In every port today, sailors are getting their ships ready to put out for the dash to the ore fields at the head of Lake Superior, for the first ore load of the season. Tackle is being overhauled, paint is being daubed on, and the engines and other equipment are rapidly getting their preseason coating of grease and oil.

Between now and the first of April is least some of the larger boats must be in shape to move from their winter berths and head for the chilling breezes which whip across the upper lakes even in late spring and summer. It won't be long now before the hawsers are cast off and the churning propellers throb out their message that industry is on the demand side of the ledger again.

Better Season Expected

The general consensus in lake ports today is that if present industrial uncertainty can largely be the possibility of a coal strike in the United States tying up industrial plants, is clarified soon, a better season of business can be expected during the 1935 season than for 1934. It is contended that if present industrial activities continue at or slightly above the current levels, more boats will be needed to carry iron ore from the Superior and Michigan docks to the lower lakes.

Lake navigation opened earlier on the lower lakes this year than in 1934. Ice conditions in the Soo region appear soft enough now to permit the big freighters to start their first drive through the packs earlier than April 15, if there is any demand for ore at that time. Whether there will be this demand immediately rests largely upon steel activity during the next few weeks and a possible upturn early in April. If ore demands must be met the season may open earlier than last year when the first boats did not get out of Superior with ore until April 15.

Shipping interests this year look for a good season. But the possibility of a coal strike in April looms as a sharp threat to lake coal movements. If this strike is called and is prolonged for any length of time, the loading of coal by upbound ships would suffer considerably. Last year, for 2,000,000 tons."

In the ore trade, however, the ore shipments from the upper lake ports, 1,500,000 tons behind the figures for 1934, when 22,921,790 tons of ore were on hand. Last year the lake boats moved 22,549,600 tons of ore out of the Lake Superior district, a gain of almost a million tons over the preceding year. With these figures in mind, keen observers of the ore trade figure the movement for this season at close to 24,000,000 tons.

Outlook Brighter

This year the season will begin with the same loading depths as last, although the lake levels have improved a few inches since the drought which paralyzed the middle west last year. Shipping interests are hoping that with better rainfall through the central region the lake levels will improve so that freighters can be loaded more heavily.

Steel authorities agree that the outlook now is brighter than last year. One observer in Cleveland, home port of the largest fleets of freighters, says:

"If the present improvement in activity at furnaces continues more ore will be brought down from the upper lakes than last year. It is impossible to make an estimate concerning this increase but it should be around 1,500,000 or 2,000,000 tons."

All in all, ship operators on the Great Lakes look for a good season.

Bock Beer, What is It? Sure It Sign of Spring

"Spring" succinctly stated the portly bar tender as he dabbed at the frothing mahogany bar with a damp rag. "Isn't really here until the Bock Beer signs go up. Of course the young sprouts nowdays don't know much about that angle of it, but ask any old timer if I'm not right. Time was when...."

In the days gone by the first robin or the budding of the tulips meant really nothing as far as spring was concerned. Much year and it was the duty of the town about town, it was supposed to have the same effect as did the sulphur and molasses on little Willie. It was looked upon as one of the best spring tonics, and even if it did not have any real medicinal properties than the ordinary beer, it was the Bock Beer signs that told a bibe a little more freely than if it was just the ordinary foam-topped mug. Maybe it was something in the ordinary lager wit ha little porter mixed in to give it color. There was, according to the bar tender who professes to know, no special reason why it should be limited to but a few weeks each year, except that people had come to expect it.

According to records bock beer originated in Munich, where it had been known as "stark bier," or the strong beer. In some manner the beer got mixed up with old Easter celebrations and it has retained its usual season since it is now the custom for people to dispense that foamy product at about that time each year.

In Munich bock beer was preceded by Salvator beer, which was the strongest of special brews. It was made originally by only the Paulist monks and was put on sale on St. Joseph's Day, March 19. The tapping of the Salvator was marked by a ceremony, the foamy liquid and it was the duty of the town council to test the strength of the new beer. The councilmen, attired in leather breeches were escorted to the Salvator cellars where the beer had been barrelled by the monks and duly awaited tasting. The city fathers were forced to sit on the bench which beer from the first barrel had been opened, and generally they retained the fulsome odor of the brew when they left the cellars.

The full ceremonial called for the alderman to sit on the bench for an hour and just by way of helping pass the hour they sang as only aldermen of the old days could sing. Between songs they took healthy pulls at the foamy liquid which gushed through the wooden spigot on the bench. The strength of the beer was judged by the time it took the councilors to fall off the bench.

Eye of Stillborn Baby Grafted on Blind Man

New York, Apr. 6.—A comparatively rare surgical operation was performed by the Columbia Presbyterian medical centre, in which the cornea of the eye of a stillborn baby was transplanted in the eye of President Clark of Wadefa, Ia.

The success of the operation, performed yesterday by Dr. Ramon Castroviejo, cannot be determined for several days. The operation was described as "unusual when effective". The patient's eyelid is sewn shut and the eye heavily bandaged so that the tissues may be undisturbed in taking root.

He reported to be resting comfortably, is national director for the State of Iowa of the National Federation of Progressive Sightless. He lost the sight of one eye in war while employed on a construction project in Omaha, Neb. The other eye was affected sympathetically so that it was possible for Clark to do little more than distinguish light from dark. It was upon this eye that the operation was performed.

A spokesman for the New York Academy of Medicine said "there has been developed a technique for cornea grafting which promises good results. A section of clear cornea is taken from some human eye and is emplanted in the affected eye of the patient. Some opaque, or non-transparent, cornea is first removed."

Parliament Hill Hears

(By WILFRID EGGLESTON)

Charles W. Bell, K.C., the member for Hamilton, tells a good yarn on his former seat-mate, Colonel Thomas Cantley, the member for Petrolia, N.S.

"Charlie" Bell came into the Chamber one day and found his colleague making an address to the House. He was fumbling through his papers nervously and stammering, not very successfully, to keep on talking while he fumbled.

Sensing that something was not quite right, and wondering if he could come to his seat-mate's assistance, Charlie Bell slid into his seat and whispered to Col. Cantley:

"How are you getting on? Are you anywhere near finished? Are you coming to our persuasion?"

"Persuasion, I never think of a member for Picton in a whispered aside. "That's the trouble! I've lost my persuasion!"

Two young flappers approached one of the policemen at the Main Entrance to the Parliament Buildings the other day. They had vaguely made up their minds that some kind of a show had been going on, and with Mr. Stevens as the leading entertainer, and that it would be worth while to drop in and see it for a while. But they didn't know what the policeman was going to say.

"Can you tell us," ventured one of them to the policeman, "where the Price of Bread committee is sitting?"

"Oh, that isn't it," interrupted the other flapper a bit impatiently. "We want to see Mr. Stevens," she said: "She means the Price Spreaders Committee!" .....

Mr. Stevens, even now acting Prime Minister (Sir George Perley) began telling the Chamber the other day about the "Spreads and Price Buying Commission!"

Dr. Doughty, now Dominion Archivist, has turned out with what is a little office in the Langevin Block and a few historical papers and books up, but the preliminary work, industry, the finest collection of historical material in Canada. Students and one of the Meccas for students of the past in any country, in short, the Archives of Canada.

Dr Doughty has always taken the firm stand that things of great interest to the nation should come to the national archives and not stay selfishly in the possession of some private owner.

An amusing story—I hope is it authentic—is passed along to illustrate his zeal on behalf of Canada.

A certain English Lord had a picture which Dr. Doughty coveted for the Dominion Archives Archivist. Having been made aware of Dr. Doughty's desire for the picture, in due course invited him to come down to his country estate and stay for the week-end. That evening they had dinner together, possibly they had something to drink. The English lord grew mellow (this started to the story).

"I'll probably present that picture to the Dominion" generously commended the nobleman.

Next morning, when the host came down for breakfast, he inquired after Dr. Doughty. To his surprise, he was informed that the Canadian Archivist had left.

"Yes," said his servant. "He came down early, ordered a cab and went off to the train with the picture you gave him for the Archives in Canada!"

Mackenzie King became leader of the Liberal party, and subsequently Prime Minister of Canada, quite largely as a result of inspiring address at the Liberal Convention in 1919 If he had not been there, had not made the speech, Sir W. Fielding not have taken his place!

The point of this inquiry is that Mr. King was within an ace of failing to reach that gathering in time for his balking for leadership, if as associate related by Owen McGilleaddy in his "Making of a Premier" is to be accepted.

Mr. King, with his secretary, Fred McGregor, now Registrar of the Combines Act, were in England just before the convention. There were two boats leaving for Canada, the "Aquitania" and the "Adriatic" and passages were tentatively booked on both.

"Mr. King preferred to remain a few days longer in England," says McGillicuddy," but he told his secretary to take whichever sailing he wished. The Secretary took the "Aquitania" which sailed on July 10th. The "Adriatic" left several days afterwards, and owing to a strike which occurred on board, did not arrive at Halifax until the afternoon of August 7th, at the time the Liberal convention was adjourning. If Mr. Skinner and his secretary had taken the second boat, the convention would not have heard the thrilling appeal on behalf of individual humanity which lifted a party and gave Mr. King the leadership."

Evidently the thought didn't occur to Owen McGillicuddy that if with Mackenzie King on board, the strike on the "Adriatic" would probably have been amicably mediated, and the boat have docked at at Halifax in time to make the Ottawa convention!

Things you may not have know about the Liberal leader....that he originally intended to be a singer ....that he played cricket and rowed at Berlin High School and ranked high in both games....that his paternal grandfather fought against his maternal grandfather in the rebellion of 1837....that his paternal grandfather was the author of works on gunnery and military engineering....that his father was an authority on Shakespeare....that among his achievements as a bankers expert was a reduction in the hours of labor women telephone operators.

CHEESE INDUSTRY SOLUTION NEAR

60 to 70 Percent of Cheese Produced to be Marketed Under Act

Toronto, Apr. 6 (CP)—Announcement that producers would vote by mail on the terms of federal and provincial marketing legislation within the next two weeks was made today by Minister of Agriculture Duncan Marshall to the agriculture committee of the Ontario legislature.

"We are well on the way to a reasonably satisfactory solution to their problems at the present time," said Mr. Marshall.

Departmental officials have assisted members to organize the industry and money grants have been given, Mr. Marshall continued.

"If this goes through satisfactorily they will be prepared to offer between 60 and 70 per cent. of all cheese produced in the province for sale under the act and they should get a reasonable price for it," the minister said.

Mr. Marshall said cheese, like the tobacco industry, lent itself to orderly marketing under the federal act and estimated 80 per cent of the cheese output was exported to Great Britain.

George H. Challies, (Cons. Grenville-Dundas) urged regulation of price according to quality.

"When you go downtown and buy eight or nine months old cheese at 28 cents there is something radically wrong," he stated. "There is too much spread between the consumer and farmer price."

Mr. Challies also urged a campaign to include cheese consumption.

Orders With Westinghouse Cancelled by Quebec Companies

800 TAKEN OFF WORK

Special to The Mail and Empire.

Hamilton, April 4.—Reduction of power contracts by the Ontario Government struck a severe blow in industry and to 800 workingmen of Hamilton to-day when Beaudmore and Maclaren-Quebec Power Company orders being filled by the Canadian Westinghouse Company here were cancelled. Work, too, will soon after officials of the power firms were in conference with Paul J. Myler, president of the Westinghouse Company. Mr. Myler said temporary employment in other departments had been found for the army of skilled workers, but they could not for long, he said, do so.

For the Quebec companies the Westinghouse was manufacturing circuit-breakers and transformers, one of the largest motor generator sets ever to be built, a frequency changer with 130,000 horsepower rating, all to be completed this year. Most of the orders were well advanced. Some machinery was shipped and some equipment was ready. Special specifications were prepared for the particular type of equipment required and it would be of no use elsewhere, it was stated.

Confirming the report that work had ceased, Mr. Myler said the situation was serious as it meant the working schedule would be sharply curtailed during 1935 next year. He explained that the men had been working three or four days a week for 30 months. "It is terrible," said Mr. Myler in stating the loss of the huge orders meant that the company would have to reduce working days. For the next year 800 skilled men would be affected by the suspension of work, he added.

Companies supplying the materials for these orders employ many men and they will share the same fate as the Westinghouse, for the order to stop work will be passed along and many will suffer.

"Be Prepared"—Scout Motto

WANTED—500 people in Belleville and district interested in boys and who will join the Belleville Local Boys Scouts' Association.

In the near future a real attempt will be made to improve scouting conditions in Belleville by forming a local association and instituting a drive for membership. The executive of this association is the central governing body of the district, and is composed of a president, secretary, treasurer and representatives from each Scout Group. When the organization meeting is called it is hoped that all interested will attend and give the Scout movement a boost.

Today we are going to tell you the rules by which a Scout is live up to when he joins this great world brotherhood of Scouts.

Before a boy is admitted to the Scouts he makes the following promise:

"I promise on my honour that I will do my best—

To do my duty to God and the King.

To help others at all times.

To obey the Scout law.

The Scout Law is tenfold in character—

1—A Scout's honour is to be trusted.

2—A Scout is loyal to the King, his country, his parents, his employers, his officers and to those under him.

3—A Scout's duty is to be useful and to help others.

4—A Scout is a friend to all, and a brother to every other Scout.

5—A Scout is courteous.

6—A Scout is a friend to animals.

7—A Scout obeys orders of his patrol leader, or Scoutmaster without question.

8—A Scout smiles and whistles under all difficulties.

9—A Scout is thrifty.

10—A Scout is clean in thought, word and deed.

It might help us through the depression if we all subscribed to this Scout Law and Promise.

CONFISCATE ALL WINNING CHEQUES

Five in New York Lose Money Won in Month-end Sweep

New York, Apr. 6.—The government's drive against gambling events stakes and lottery tickets has brought grief to at least five "lucky" ticket holders within the last few days, it became known.

The five, who received cheques for small amounts after a recent Month-end prize drawing, have been called to open their envelopes in the presence of postoffice officials and surrender the contents.

The cheques, along with accompanying explanatory literature, were sent to Washington "for final disposition."

All mail suspected of containing sweepstakes or lottery matter is being held up at the postoffice and the addressees notified to come and get it. When they arrive they are permitted to open the envelope, and if postoffice inspectors' suspicions are proved to have been correct the contents are confiscated.

BRITAIN LEADS

Britain has found the quickest and most effective way to conquer the depression. The British, who were rocked by labor troubles for many years and which seemed to some shaking heads as decadent is not moribund, but is heading the world out of chaotic conditions. Before the depression hit the Western World Britain had her difficulties of strikes and other problems, and the coming of world depression accentuated the condition.

Britishers, however, are built in a heroic mould. When times get hard, they pull in the belt and tax themselves. If they find fortune smiling and money moving freely they make the best use of it and then when times turn dull they face the situation squarely. Any rule works both ways. The Britisher taxes himself when the bad days come. And he knows how to tax himself in a way that puts to shame the puny efforts at taxing which some other countries have made.

What is the result when a man endures the way the Britishers endure? The country lifts out of the swamp of depression. For the second consecutive year Britain has a surplus—the budget is balanced. Income tax which was five shillings to the pound was cut in April a year ago to 4/6/0 and government workers got back half of their salary cut imposed in 1931.

The strong man who is master of himself is master of depressions. Before the rest of the world has caught more than a glimpse of revival Britain will be indulging in the pleasures of recovery.

But she still continues to pay well and will continue so to do.

It is well to do to pay for such a country as Britain. Individual as well as nation must do likewise, even at this late date.

In the words of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Neville Chamberlain, uttered a year ago, "We are finishing Bleak House and going on to Great Expectations."

Britain's surplus is $36,000,000 this year, while in the United States where there does not seem the same determination of all people to bear the load, however hard it be, the nine months' deficit is the trifle of $2,493,000,000. It appears as if it will take some time for the United States to achieve a budget balanced.

The sane optimism of the British should be a guiding star to Canada in her quest of destiny. There is something in the British makeup which enables people love to attack even a hard problem like depression, even while carrying a mighty load (though what load is not the way for armaments, at the time she is doing her best to guide the nations to a haven of world peace.

O. N. R. IMPROVEMENT

Canadian National Railways showed a better condition of business for the past year, according to the annual statement issued a few days ago. Gross operating revenue rose over sixteen million dollars and the cash deficit showed a decrease of deficit during the preceding year of over ten millions. There was an increase in the freight revenues of 12.3 per cent.

Those who are associated with the railways and there are a considerable portion of the population of this city cannot but be encouraged by the report.

The recent utterance of the Hon. Robert Manion, Minister of Railways and Canals to the effect that amalgamation was not to be contemplated was pleasing to those who believe in competition of the two railway systems.

HIGHWAY BEAUTIFICATION

Attempt to beautify the highways is being made in New York State under a bill which will control billboards.

Ontario has billboards which are erected at turns near the highways, where a panorama would extend if it were not for these barriers to sight.

Impressive as they may be from publicity purposes, though this value of them is problematical, billboards are not as beautiful as nature is and ought to be removed.

Even in a field a far-off billboard is unsightly.

No billboard should be allowed to be erected in a field or other place where it blots the view of the countryside.

Billboard-less highways would bring many times as much money to the country as billboards bring to the owners of the property on which they are placed, and no one can contend that they have any attraction for a tourist or a local motorist.

In New York State the plan is to prohibit erection of these signs within 500 feet of a railway crossing or two hundred feet of a highway crossing.

Quebec has been beautifying its highways for some years with a rigid control of signs.

No joy in nature is so sublimely affecting as the joy of a mother at the good fortune of her child.—Richter.

All that I am my mother made me.—John Quincy Adams.

WHEN PRINCES PIPE

The slow march, "Majorca", recently composed by the Prince of Wales, is said to be enjoying great popularity with certain Scottish bands. Some observers of political trends and developments might be tempted to infer from the circumstance that the function of royalty in Great Britain is changing; that is, more and more, becoming social and artistic, and less and less political, as the years go by. But in doing so they would be underestimating important factors.

In the first place, the artistic ability shown by the Prince of Wales is by no means an unusual phenomenon in the history of British royalty. James I was a voluminous author, Elizabeth an accomplished orator, and Henry VIII a composer of airs that are still played. So, that there is nothing odd or even unexpected in the heir to the English throne writing a marching tune.

Furthermore, the political importance of the British crown has, if anything, increased rather than diminished during the last few years. On the occasion of the Jubilee it will probably stand at a higher point than at any time since the reign of Queen Victoria. Imperial developments since the World War have left the crown as the only real link holding the various parts of the British Commonwealth of Nations together, thus emphasizing its prestige.

Royalty in England has many powers that it does not exercise, but which, in any emergency, or if public opinion demanded, could be immediately enforced. But King George's subjects know that if this latent authority were ever exercised, it would be exercised only to the public good, forming as harmonious a combination, as it were, as does the tune of the Prince of Wales.—Christian Science Monitor.

PROMISING CANDIDATES

"At the coming election, if any candidate in my riding says 'I promise not to give you one dam'd thing more than you have got a paid for,' I'll vote for him with enthusiasm."

We heard a man say that the other day. It ought to be put to music and distributed throughout the country as a voter's war chant.

Canada has been crucified by election campaigning.

We are a nation of auctioneers, knocking things down to the highest political bidder.

When the bills are received, we can't pay them. So we borrow.

Civilization, to us, is the condition in which one generation pays the last generation's debts by issuing promissory notes for the next generation to pay.

Contemplate the picture of duplicate ridings—federal and provincial. Particularly in those cases wherein the party in power in the province is opposite to the party in power at Ottawa.

The Government, with an eye on the vote in that vicinity, proceeds to build a post-office or a dock. Not to be outdone, the provincial Government hastens to build a road.

Not because there is real need for such things. Merely in order that it cannot be said that the Conservatives have spent more money in the riding than the Liberals or vice versa.

In short, it is bribery. Bribery with an odd twist. Because the person bribed, being a taxpayer, pays the amount of the bribe himself.

Bribery is a good word because it carries its own lesson. It is derived from an old French word, bribberie, meaning beggary.

And political bribery ends in public beggary.

When in the forthcoming campaign, you hear any candidate announce, "If elected I promise to do my utmost to get you—," remember that it is your money he is going to use.—Maclean's Magazine.

CHEESE FOR THE LEGISLATURE

The Legislature at Toronto is being treated to a succession of samples of cheese produced in dierent parts of the province. A week ago, G. T. Bowerman, the member for Prince Edward, furnished the members with cheese produced within the borders of his constituency and at that time P. M. Dewan, member for Oxford, asked his associates to wait for a few days until he could povide them with real cheese. In consequence of this, the members of the Legislature are now feasting upon Oxford cheese.

We might rise to suggest that the Toronto members will not appreciate Canadian factory cheese as its best until they are supplied with samples of that which is produced in the Leeds-Grenville dairying area. And it may be expected that George T. Fulford, the member for Leeds, will rise nobly to the occasion in order that the superlative merits of this product may be appreciated.—Brockville Recorder and Times.

There are no crown-wearers in Heaven that were not cross-bearers here below.—Spurgeon.

Trifles make perfection, but perfection itself is no trifle.—Michelangelo.

It is in those acts which we call trivialities that the seeds of joy are forever wasted.—George Eliot.

HIS GRACIOUS MAJESTY KING GEORGE has reigned with dignity and decorum for twenty-five years—twenty-five years of tumult and strife in the world, engulfing nations in depression, a time when thrones have rocked and crowns have tumbled but during which the throne of England has gained new strength as a stabilizing force among the nations. It is fitting therefore that the Parliament of Canada should mark the Silver Jubilee of their King by proclaiming a public holiday—"a day of general thanksgiving and rejoicing."

Also that the Scotch terrier, hereinbefore referred to had inadvertently a few days before, caused the destruction of several panes of glass aggregating a total loss of approximately one dollar and twenty-five cents, and who are we to doubt that the said loss to a devoted and beloved master would not cause sincere grief to an educated, intelligent Scotch terrier, who by virtue of his heritage, knows the value of a dollar. Every person possesses at least one instinctive urge which sooner or later forces itself into the mind's recognition. This is the desire for fatherhood or motherhood.

This urge of course, is nothing more or less than the instinct to race perpetuation and, consciously it takes the form of falling in love

At puberty comes an increased interest in the opposite sex. Behind this are the physical changes which signify maturity. The normal way of falling in love develops rather rapidly after that; boys and girls find themselves irresistibly yearning for the companionship and affection of some definite person to whom they have become attached.

However, the ideal way of veneration from father and mother to some other person is not always so abrupt. Very often the child's love is first strongly attached to his sister, or to a boy friend, or perhaps to a near female relative, before he transfers to a new acquaintance.

Likewise the girl may for awhile find her father-love or brother-love sufficiently satisfying, and may go on the other hand, become unusually attached to a chum at school—in some cases developing the "crush"—before instinctive demand reads her out of the girlhood and confusing family circle who are more attractive than the home folks.

One's first love, however, may not be the genuine thing. First love may be the adoring and lasting feeling it should be. It proves, rather, a mere merry an attraction, a passing fancy, perhaps an infatuation that is bound to fade, strongly resembling love for a while.

When real love grips you, when you want always to be in your beloved's presence, when the thoughts of your chosen make fill your mind day and night, when you cannot conceive of life apart, then is it hard to believe there can be any question as to whether you should consult your parents about son for your mate.

Yet this advice may be widely misleading. That the first love impulse may be far from wise guidance is proved by the number of divorces following hasty marriages.

A certain that parents or friends are not running away with you. Give your reason a chance to function. Study every angle of the question. The person with whom you have fallen in love may not necessarily make a good wife and mother or a good husband and father.

Bear in mind that your love itself tends to make you think the very best of your beloved. You may quite overlook entirely to the short comings of the one whom you desire so much of a life partner.

Tell it love if you must. But in it is natural and healthy. But take your time before you sign on the dotted line.

Persons who suffer from acid stomach and a tendency to gas formation and discomfort after eating are frequently benefited by taking two or a half or one teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda dissolved in might well consider the treatment half a glass of water immediately after each meal. Such treatment may be continued for a week or two or longer. In fact, such individuals every month or two.

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS

20 Years Ago

April 6th, 1915

The thirty-fifth annual ball of the Challenge Lodge No 66, B. of L. F. & E. Academy, Front street, last evening, was largely attended and a most enjoyable affair. The hall was decorated for the occasion with flags and bunting, while the usual light of Engine No. 66 reposed in the front of the room, its light being used for a number of the dances and was a decided success. The Bills orchestra provided the music. Following are the names of the members of the committee to whom the great success of the evening is due: O. Naylor, chairman; R. W. Hubbs, Sec.-Treas.; Geo. Darrah, H. W. Kerr, P. H. Nolan, P. R. Welch, F. A. Pinkston, N. Williamson, W. Adams and R. Spafford.

Mr. Frank Morrison of the Standard Bank, spent Easter at his home in Parkhill, Ont.

Mr. Douglas McKinnon of the Bank of Montreal, Toronto spent Easter at his home in this city.

30 Years Ago

April 6th, 1905

The Belleville Old Boys and Girls in Toronto are evidently looking forward to next July with great anticipation. They will hold an excursion to this city on July 22nd to 30th, the return fare being only $1.75, and expect to bring a record crowd. Mr. Chas. L. Rosevear, the Secretary of the Toronto Old Boys and Girls Association, is evidently a hustler and the right man in the right place. When he comes home next July the genial Charlie should receive an extra warm welcome, for he has certainly done much to awaken and keep alive the love for "home, sweet, sweet home", which now glows so brightly in the hearts of hundreds of Belleville Old Boys and Girls in Toronto.

Considerable maple syrup was offered for sale on the market today. The ruling price was 90c to 95c per quart.

Mr and Mrs. Chas. H. Grase Charles street north, celebrated the fortieth anniversary of their marriage last evening. A number of relatives were most pleasantly entertained.

40 Years Ago

April 6th, 1895

Front street presented a lively scene today; many farmers were in town to buy their spring supplies.

Constable Thos. Hanley has a large force of men at work on the Andrew's Presbyterian Church, and Sub-contractor Luscombe is pushing the excavations and removal of debris with a large gang of men.

Dr. Simmons of Frankford was in town today.

Mr. Jas. Wallace, M.P.P., is home to spend Sunday.

Mrs. R. D. Conger has returned to Ottawa from Toronto where she visited friends.

Mr. J. W. Johnson is in Toronto on business.

Mr. J. W. London of the Intelligencer office was in Deseronto on business today.

Mrs. H. A. Dean has returned to Deseronto after visiting relatives here.

50 Years Ago

April 6th, 1885

Mrs. Maclean of this city, accompanied by her uncle, Mr. John Chantler, visited Mr. Chantler, Mrs. W. O. Craig, residents of Kingston, waited upon the officers and men of the 49th Hastings Rifles and 15th Battalion A.L.I., at their headquarters in Kingston yesterday morning to present to them the testamenta that the ladies of Belleville had provided for the men, which unfortunately did not reach Belleville in time to give them before they left for Kingston enroute to the Northwest. Capt. Harrison of the 49th and Capt. Lester of the 15th, introduced Mrs. Maclean and the respective companies in a few well chosen words expressing their pleasure at seeing such a well known Belleville lady and telling them why Mrs. Mclean was there. It also that each one, who felt at liberty to do so, would receive a testament. In the front of each testament was written the following text: "Many a horse and mules in charge, but we will trust in the Lord our God." When addressing the men Mrs. Maclean said she hoped that they would adopt this text as their motto. Capt. Harrison and Capt. Lester thanked the ladies of Belleville on behalf of Mrs. Maclean for their gift and address.

Directions were received at Kingston last night that the troops stationed there should start for the front this morning. This morning they were all embarked in the cars in waiting and started for the scene of action about noon. The train consisted of eight cars and four baggage cars, which were filled with the outfits of the men. In all there were had sixty-two men and twenty-two officers constituted the entire party.

Minor road patching and repairs throughout this city this week have required the services of some four or five men, hired by the department of public works. The spring program of patching and repairing is one of the lightest in years, it was reported by the department, due to favorable weather conditions during the winter, and the gradual thawing of the roads this spring.

A Thought for Today

"While he yet spake, behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them: and behold a voice out of the cloud, which said, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him."
—St. Matthew, 17:5.

Buganda Tribe Adopts White Law

The Buganda Tribe of East Africa is making history.

Its members are intelligent representatives of their race and having adopted the white man's civilization they are now proceeding to adapt it to their own needs.

They have formed a Buganda Commons Association which has for its object the division of the native parliament into an upper and a lower house, the one being the House of Lords and consisting of all Chiefs, the Royal family and all elderly notables and all clergymen and the other, the House of Commons comprising headmen, business men and peasants.

The Buganda Commons Association is very serious in its intentions and has already given effect to its aspirations in a petition to the British Government and has sent a copy of the petition to their own king.

The Buganda Intelligentia feel that the only way to security and moderation in legislation is by way of the dual chamber and that the check on the lower house should be by a chamber of hereditary lawmakers.

The petition which has been submitted to the British Government concludes with the significant observation: "We hear there are stated to be three countries on the same lines of civilization, namely, England in Europe, Japan in Asia and Uganda in Africa."—African Press.

BACK PENSION TO BANCROFT MAN

W. A. Dillon Awarded $5,131 by The Pension's Board

The award of $5,131 back pension and the sum of $126 per month hereafter, granted W. A. Dillon, well known returned man of Bancroft, has ended a four year fight with Canadian pensions authorities for recognition of injuries received by him during the Great War, it was revealed at Ottawa yesterday.

Mr. Dillon, the father of a large family, received the $6,000 cheque from the government on Wednesday of this week.

The Pensions Board, according to reports from Ottawa, found that Dillon is 100 per cent disabled from tuberculosis; that while he suffered from the disease prior to enlistment, his war service aggravated it, and so finally disabled him.

Dillon's application for pension was first made in 1926. It was refused by the Pensions Board then in operation, and in the year 1933 he appealed to the pensions tribunal. That body upheld his claim, but the board appealed from the decision of the tribunal and after reviewing the case the appeal court threw out the application but gave leave to appeal later.

Dillon collected later evidence and once more made an appeal. By this time the tribunal had been abolished and a new board established. The Board investigated and awarded him his pension from the date of his original application.

The arrears of pensions thus awarded totalled $5,400. Dillon has never had been in destitute circumstances and had been receiving the war veterans' allowance and his wife the mothers' allowance from the Ontario government. If the $7,400 award includes the pensions for his wife and their five children back to 1926 repayment of the two allowances is called for. From his $7,400 Dillon pays back to the war veteran's allowance fund $1,400 and to the mothers' allowance fund $990, leaving him $5,131.

Since receiving the money Dillon has purchased a home in Bancroft.

COMMITTEE GIVEN A DEMONSTRATION

Fire Department Shows Handicap Fighting Fire at County Home

Members of the Hastings County Council House of Refuge Committee, who attended the test yesterday afternoon in a body, following a preliminary discussion of the matter in committee at Shire Hall, were given a graphic demonstration by members of No. 1 Brigade of the local fire department of its inability to fight any fire which might break out in the Home.

The meeting which was held to discuss ways and means of further fire protection at the House of Refuge followed the recommendation to that effect contained in a report submitted from the office of the Ontario Fire Marshal as the result of a recent inspection of the buildings adjourned to the Home where members of the fire department were asked to put on test.

Two hose lines, each one hundred feet long, coupled to a hydrant, fed by a four inch pipe running from Bleecker Avenue main, a distance of some two thousand feet, were unable to throw water to the windowsot the first floor in the building, it was reported by Fire Chief Lynch. The committee, impressed by the lack of sufficient force in the small main to combat any fire, will be faced with the alternative of running a larger main with a larger one, or the construction of a reservoir, which may be used by a power pump to force water through a system installed inside the buildings.

The matter of fire escapes on the outside of the building leading from each floor, especially the home with approved fire extinguishers and other improved aids for fire-fighting will be dealt with by the committee.

Obituary

Napanee, April 5.—Edward O. O'Brien, a Belleville C.N.R. clerk was committed by Magistrate Ambrose Shea to stand trial in higher court on a charge of manslaughter. The charge results from the death of 4-year-old Billy Fitzgerald of Napanee, who was fatally injured by a motor car driven by O'Brien while he was playing on the sidewalk near his home. Thursday's evidence, which lasted five hours, included testimony by O'Brien's two passengers, Walter Allore and James Deacon. Allore admitted that he could not remember anything fro the time the party left Shannonville until after the accident. O'Brien was released on $10,000 bail. He is expected to be tried at the Fall Assizes in October.

POETRY

ONE BOY LEFT THE FARM

I left my dad, his farm, his plow,
Because my calf became his cow;
I left my dad, 'twas wrong of course
Because my colt became his horse;
I left my dad to sow and reap,
Because my lamb became his sheep;
I dropped my hoe and struck my work
The garden truck I made to grow,
Was his to sell and mine to hoe.

ANOTHER DIDN'T

With dad and me it's half and half
The cow I won was one his calf;
No town for mine, I will be built,
Because my horse was once his colt.
I'm going to stick right here I am,
Because my sheep was once his lamb
I'll play with dad—he got my vote,
Because my hog was once his shoat;
It's fifty-fifty with dad and me—
A profit sharing company.

INTERESTING PLAY GIVEN AT BETHEL

All roads led to Bethel on Thursday evening, April 4th, when members of the Young People's Society presented their play "Timmie Venson's Will."

This play gave plenty of scope for good acting and to make it interesting there were love, tragedy and comedy as well as a ghost and Scripture and the inevitable happy ending.

The scenes took place in the living room of the Kent farm house. Dollie Kent had been a hundred dollars stolen from Mr. Kent and suspicion points to the only son "Bob". He has been accused of the theft and disappears. The family think that he has committed suicide by jumping in the river. The superstitious Irish servants think the place is haunted and are in terror of the ghost. Bob decides to come back disguised as a Swede and try to find out who the real thief is. He calls himself "Timmie Venson from Manisaota". This part was ably taken by Frank Foster.

Mr. Kent, as owner of the farm, was taken by Stanley Webb. He played the part of a stern farmer with a decided and determined manner, also obstinate and stubborn.

His wife, Mrs. Kent, is a sweet patient woman and inclined to be an invalid. Her heart is filled with sorrow over the loss of her boy This was taken by Mrs. Hagerty.

Mrs. Roy Jones, the only adopted daughter, Belle, presented a picture of a gentle, unselfish girl. She has been secretly married to Bob which comes to light in the last act.

Mrs. Harold Foster as Sylvia, the maid in "Rest Awhile" is here for her vacation, had a long and exacting part to play but performed it well

Frank Gunn, who clerks in the grocery store and boards at the Kent home, is also in love, and has done it so cleverly that suspicion points to Bob. He is also planning to rob Mr. Kent again but is interrupted. This was rather a difficult role requiring especially clever acting and was ably handled by Clarence Graham.

Gerald Blakely as Pal, acted the part of a detective and in the end act succeeds in arresting Frank Gunn. Gerald has a fine way with Kittie and plans to come back in two years and marry her.

Norma Bethel acted the part of "Peg" the Irish cook. She is a clever, decided and insistent in manner, very superstitious and believes ghosts of the ghost. She adores Mrs Kent and Belle but despises Sylvia and shows it.

Clayton Elliott took the part of Stickey, the excitable Irishman, who is the farm hand. He is in love with Peg, the cook, and they have been engaged for two years.

Doris Coulter took the part of Kittie, the saucy, mischievous girl, and played it well.

The whole play was well acted and reflects credit, not only on those who took part, but much of the credit for the success of the play is due to the efforts of Mrs. Hagerty who so ably directed the rehearsals.

Other numbers on the program were a duet, "When you and I were young, Maggie", by Phyllis Dyer and Roy Thompson; encore "No, no, John"; solo by Mrs. Dalton Clark, "Mother McCree"; encore "Annie Laurie"; reading, "Betty at the baseball game", by Mrs. Hagerty. Also numbers by the newly-organized Tweed orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Dark.

Away from the front go many of the fur trimmed coats on new ones. A smart little capelet suit of grayish-blue novelty woolen has a wide encrusted section of caracul down the middle of the capelet back.

A friendly enemy to the big hat is the quite tiny pillbox and toque. A clever toque is of betting velvet done on sectioned lines with an upstanding ribbon ornament on the very peak of the crown. An eye veil of stiffened lace completes this nice afternoon hat.

Gray clouds gather at all smart places as gray jumps into the lead. A lovely evening frock is an all-over printed satin done in shades of gray, shading from silver to smoke. Shoulder straps of bright green crepe continue in criss-cross fashion down the back and terminate at the end of the trained skirt in the form of sash ends.

A must for Spring is a little shirtwaist dress in plaided taffeta, one of the most popular of the new fashions. A neat model is in black, white and" mustard yellow plaided taffeta. The shirtwaist dice is accented by a self-Ascot scarf tied with mustard yellow crepe.

Riding high on the side of the head are many of the new hats. This line is used for a while Panama which has a bandeau of black grosgrain ribbon through it all to the crown. This model ties with a bow in front.

An answer to many prayers comes in the form of a backless and strapless slip that is soon to be placed on the market. It comes in satin with elastic thread woven in t.. banns a slim fit under evening frocks.

Library Corner

English Literature in the Twentieth Century by J. W. Cunliffe is a clever and comprehensive study of modern English literature of the Edwardian and Georgian periods. The author in his introductory chapter describes the influences that have molded the thinking of the period. It has been a period of development, of change and this literature of the time reflects it.

The author treats each author individually and at the end of each article gives a complete bibliography of the writer's works and of books about his work. Some of the writers dealt with at length are Shaw, Arnold Bennett, H. G. Wells, Conrad, and Galsworthy. There is an interesting section on the Celtic Renaissance and the chapters on Georgian novelists and Georgian poets offer material that is difficult to get elsewhere.

The Diary and Letters of Madame D'Arblay better known as Fanny Burney, one of the pioneer women novelists is extremely interesting. not only because of her life at the court of George III, but also because she had such distinguished friends. She was a personal friend of Dr. Johnson's and disliked Boswell, who was she thought not properly respectful to the memory of the great man. She has entertaining tales of Sheridan, Goldsmith and attended Warren Hastings' trial as an unofficial observer from the court. Her husband was a French emigre who afterwards held a commission in the Louis XVIII's household troops. She was in Brussels at the time of the Battle of Waterloo. There is a rather dramatic account of the departure of the British Brunswickers for the front, so few of whom survived to return. It is in fact a picture of the time seen through the eyes of a rather unsophisticated little lady.

Death in the Afternoon by Earnest Hemmingway.

Mr. Hemmingway is best described as a sensation. Every one of his books, as it appears, is featured prominently in the papers, in which the author is acclaimed in extremely flattering terms. Also in the frontispiece of this book you have a startling presentation of the character of the author. It is in fact a picture of a bull-fighter, a horrible grisly picture, composed of an unharmonizing medley of ears, eyes, sign-boards, and indistinguishable scraps of colour. In brief, a specimen of modern art. His book is like that. This is by no means as "horrible", as the painting, it is certainly not gruesome.

With bewildering honesty, and amazing psychological perception, accompanied by a masterful style of philosophy, he, after explaining frankly his motives for writing the book, presents a very unusual treatise of bull-fighting, well described by the title of "Death in the Afternoon". At the oddest places, he begins imaginary conversation with an inquisitive old lady, who by asking just the questions he wishes to answer, gives him an opportunity to expand on what goes on in the mind of a modern matador. He has no regard for any of the established rules of complete, concise, regular, well-developed writing, but wanders from one idea to another, wherever his fancy, based upon accurate knowledge of the subject, leads him. More for emphasis of his arguments than for illustration of them, he adds at the end, a long number of full page photographs of bull-fighting and bull-fighters, which, accompanied by detailed, but appropriate explanation, show every phase of the sport, from professional bull-fighting in the arena, to amateur bull-fighting in the streets, and from the march of the matadors to the beginning of their goring and death at the end.

It is indeed a remarkable book, and well-worth reading.

Russia's Iron Age, by William Henry Chamberlin, author of Soviet Russia, is indispensible to a proper understanding of the Soviet Union of today.

Since 1922, Mr. Chamberlain has been the Russian correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor. He describes such changes as the Soviet policy as the intensified industrialism, the unemployment on a huge scale of forced labour under inhuman conditions, and the famine of 1932-33 which could not have been adequately described by any of the permanent correspondents in Moscow. To have done so would have jeopardised their positions and the lives of their informants.

Managing Mamma and Good Cats as Girls' Best Helps in Matrimony

"We sent the fifth Miss——a wedding present last week and thanked her for it. Really, we're about done with daughters to marry off," a correspondent wrote me a day or two ago. "Their wedding presents were making a dent in our wardrobe."

According to this lady's letter, the five Misses——were not pretty, amusing or well-dressed girls, and certainly they had no money. Yet, even in the sad days of the depression, their mother began marrying them off—and marrying them off well.

The youngest, who was married a week ago, was the least good-looking of any of them. Yet she made the best match of all, and my correspondent was unkind enough to say this was because the mother had perfected her technique, and by there had been any more daughters to marry she would no doubt have stopped at dukes or crowned heads.

Mrs.——'s recipe for picking the richest and most matrimonial plums for her not very pretty daughters was to make her home so attractive that all the young men loved to go there.

The family lived in a fairly large town, and Mrs.——was left a widow with five daughters, no money and a heavily mortgaged house. She turned the two upper floors into housekeeping apartments and rented them, and the main floor she reserved for her own family and the girls.

Her rooms that turned the trick and brought all the eligible young men in town flocking to her door was an old basement kitchen, which she converted into an attractive club or recreation room.

There was a scenic paper on the wall, and some attractive furniture and hangings were added before the life as packing boxes. This was upholstered in gay cretonne. The old range was pushed out and a large open fireplace installed. Highly polished copper pots and pans hung around, but I doubt if they were ever used for cooking—just props.

There were a radio, a victrola and an electric grill, on which a good many after-theatre suppers and whatnots were cooked. The woodwork was painted grayish green and on the wall were some old prints, clipped from English magazines and framed. The place was so cozy and charming and homelike that it satisfied all kinds of domestic dreams in the minds of the eligible young men.

After the oldest Miss—had married a rich widower, in addition to the done-over kitchen club room the four remaining sisters had her house for a becoming background. And there were all sorts of dinners, parties and entertainments there, for "sister" had taken up chasing a week.

So the three intermediate Misses—decided to take the matter in order, leaving the homely one the subject for much speculation among their friends. And the way this system was so perfect, that the homely girl and homelier sister made the best match of all.

The moral is that the popularity of a girl and her ability to make a good match, depends to a large extent upon her mother's success as a gregarious hostess. No matter how humble, if a girl has a pleasant home where young people like to congregate, the girl will be popular.

Especially is this true if there is some sort of contrivance for getting up a simple meal. It may be nothing more than coffee and sandwiches or chocolate and waffles, but in that atmosphere of hospitality young people will congregate and a daughter will never lack for dates.

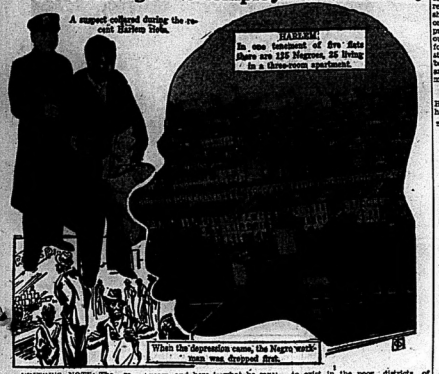
Riots in Harlem Viewed as Result Of Prolonged Unemployment, Poverty



EDITOR'S NOTE: The recent riots in Harlem, New York's negro district, have called the attention of sociologists to conditions in negro sections throughout the United States.

By LOU WEDEMAR

Central Press Canadian Correspondent

New York, April 6.—There are 400,000 negroes in Harlem, and 40 per cent. of them are unemployed.

In this one statement lies the explanation of the recent riots there, and the threat of renewed violence in the future.

Years ago, when Harlem was a model negro community, almost every negro worked: Men and women, children and elderly folk.

They had been taught, in public schools, in church, by the newspapers and by missionaries and crusaders, that there was a future for them, and they were holding their heads high.

Then, suddenly, thousands of them could not find work. The first victims were women, and, with their morals gone, their morals went, too. The boast that Harlem was the world's cleanest negro section was not true any longer. For the first time in 20 years a "red light" district appeared — among the negroes. And that red lantern, with its grim significance, was the signal of a reversion to type that today alarms not only New York's whites.

Probably, in a survey of the entire United States, covering even the best-negro districts, it would be impossible to find a class that has suffered more since 1929 than the American negro. Industrialists explain that the reason why unemployment hit the negroes worse than others is that they were largely "luxury workers," and that they were the first dismissed, and will be the last re-employed.

Many of them were housewreckers, and when a middle-class white family found itself in financial straits its first step in rehabilitation was to get rid of the maid, the cleaner, the handyman. So they went back home to Harlem, and tried to forget their dreams of being more than a coolie class in America.

Communist Charge

"You can't blame the Communists for the riots."

So say the leading Harlem business men, pastors, editors and social workers. The Rev. William Sheldon Bishop, for instance, pastor of Harlem's leading church, has studied the negro's problem for years, and here is what he says:

"They are starving, penniless, without decent clothes. They live in hovels, many of them—sometimes a dozen to a room. The negro gives food and comfort, and he finds it, in his own way. But our people now have nothing. They are the poorest of America's poor."

The reason Harlem doesn't blame Communists for the riots is that they know the riots meant little to themselves. They knew there would have been no riots if there had been enough police in Harlem, and they know there might be riots in Wall St., or Fifth Ave., if there were no law police and a crowd gathered led by an agitator.

Worse a Year Ago

They know also that while the riots called attention to conditions in Harlem, the conditions have been bad for four years or more, and that they were worse a year ago, when there were no riots. And they believe that the peoples who took part in them were merely venting pentup feeling, and not consciously demonstrating at all.

The first need in Harlem, it would appear, is work for its unemployed. Where this is not possible, the negroes should get free assistance—relief in one form or another.

But such men as Harvey Raymond, executive secretary of the Harlem Merchants' Association, believe the need is far deeper—that it lies in the age-old need of the negro to be better understood.

Many leaders believe that the Communist organizers, who are spending much time and money in making the negroes in Harlem conscious of their conditions, would be unable to make any headway if the older political parties paid attention to the negro's problems. But, impoverished themselves, the politicians think of the negroes last.

A trip through the slums of Harlem show conditions such as used to exist in the poor districts of many American cities, before property made possible physical improvements of many kinds.

Huddled in One Building

In one squalid tenement, for instance, with five "flats," there are 125 negroes living—25 in each apartment of three rooms.

There is no excuse for privacy—and worse, sanitation is of the type of the dark ages. Disease threatens Harlem today—an epidemic which might sweep the city, and extend far beyond the bounds of the negro district.

Evictions are so frequent that there are more city marshals assigned to Harlem than to any other district. Families live in a place as long as they can, and they are turned out on the street. Then, until they can get money enough for a friend's rent in a flophouse, they live with some other family—increasing, each time, the average number of persons per room in Harlem, rents are high in Harlem, and city housing projects have not helped in the slightest, for none were built.

Vice—prostitution and gambling—are common in Harlem. The streets are thronged with men and girls, some homeless, others with only a chiseled roof.

Enough Police?

Poor police protection is the cry raised by Harlem merchants whose windows were smashed by the rioters. They tell of robberies, burglaries, stick-ups; they show the police records of 30 holdups within a day.

More policemen—say, one a block to every block of Harlem—might prevent casual strangers from being robbed.

But the college men of Harlem, its pastors, its civic leaders—the men who were so proud a few years ago of the negro's rising place in art, literature and music—they say all the policemen in the world won't cure Harlem's troubles.

Chief William Bain, Mrs. F. Scott, Mrs. R. O. Bowen, J. Stark, Joseph Coulter, J. C. Squire Jr., and Col. A. E. Sweator.

Dr. Taylor V.S., local inspector of the Humane Society gave his regular monthly report which showed the fine work being carried on for the animals. He was highly praised for his fine work throughout the district. During the month four suffering animals were destroyed. Two persons were brought before the courts for cruelty to animals. The inspector had ordered many stables cleaned in the month.

REFUSE TO GOVERN

Windsor, Ont., April 6 (CP) — Before accepting the distaste of the Board of Supervisors in connection with this year's budget, Windsor city council, as far as Mayor George Bennett is concerned, will refuse to govern. The Mayor made this assertion, when addressing members of the Board of Education and a group of teachers.

KEEP CLASS UNDER COLORS

Paris, April 6 (CP-Havas)— The cabinet today decided to keep under the flag the class of 1913, numbering approximately 160,000 men, for an additional three months. It was approved as a precautionary measure in the face of German rearmament. Under normal circumstances, the class would have been released from uniform next Saturday.

France, it was learned today, will propose at the coming Stresa conference a European mutual assistance pact spiked by a method of rapidly defining an aggressor to guarantee security in the face of German military moves.

PROPOSE NEW CHANNEL

Ottawa, April 6 (CP)—Completion during the coming summer months of a guaranteed 23 1-2 foot channel, even at the lowest points, along the St. Lawrence River stretch from the port of Montreal to the ocean is proposed as a step to combat the vexed problem of low water levels in the channel, it was learned today.

A further proposal for solution of the situation is the virtual rebuilding of three wharves in the port of Montreal for the accommodation of large vessels with a draught of 35 feet.

Trenton Golf Course to be Put in First Class Condition

Members Contemplate Best Year in History of Club

Trenton, April 6 (Special) — A general meeting of the Trenton Golf Club was held in the Town Hall on Thursday night with a good number of members on hand, both ladies and gents. Dr. John E. Renton, the president, was in the chair. With the town's new water supply turned on, the club will be able to have all the water necessary for greens. In the past two years the course was not in the best condition owing to the water shortage. All greens will be attended to at once to make the local course one of the best in the district, when the season opens. It was decided to have a membership drive and each member attending the meeting gave a list of prospective new members, which the executive board will write. The question of fees brought much discussion, and year new members were admitted for $7.50, while the old members were assessed $20.00. Some argued that the second year should elevate the new members to the old members' class. R. Y. Wemyss suggested that an intermediate rate of $15.00 be struck as the new members last year were not given all they were promised owing to the course condition for the lack of water. After debating for sometime it was decided to submit the following rate schedule to the board of directors for their decision: Beginners, first season year, $7.50, second year, $15.00, and following the old members fee of $30.00. Ladies fees were suggested as before, $7.50 for beginners and $10.00 after.

Stanley Cole was again engaged as greenkeeper at a monthly salary of $100.00 but he was to be given to understand, that he could be let go without a months notice if necessary. President Renton told the members, that finances must come in or the club would have to close shop. He was not going to run in the "red". An air of optimism prevailed as the meeting closed with prospects for new members being good with the new water supply to add to the course.

Humane Society

The annual meeting of the Trenton Humane Society was held in the townhall this week with a good number being on hand. The president, Mrs. A. R. Bywater was in the chair while the past year's work was reviewed. It was most pleasing to hear that the membership had increased and a good bank balance was on hand at the end of the current year. The president drew the lucky number of a raffle quilt on a cake that was donated by R. D. Bonter. The winner was Joseph Vantassel.

The next order of business was the election of officers. Thomas Jarrett, editor of the Quinte Sun and former member of the Town Council and Board of Education, was the unanimous choice for the presidency. Others elected were: and Mrs. E. C. Malle. Miss Winnifred Gauthier, Mrs. W. R. Wilson,

STORY OF MURDER TOLD AT INQUEST

Letter Read Explains Attack on Greek Priest

Yorkton, Sask., Apr. 6 (CP) Twelve-year-old Peter Klash, son of the late Steve Klash, blacksmith, died of diphtheria Dec. 3, 1930. That night his father conceived the idea of murdering Father John Bela of the Greek Catholic Mission here and cutting his body into pieces.

Father Bela had stroked the face of the boy as he lay dying and Klash vowed "to square up with that Priest Bela". Last March 21 Klash ran amok with a revolver, shooting to death Father Albert Delforge, wounding Father Bela and mortally wounding himself.

The story was unfolded Friday at an inquest into Klash's death, which is being continued today. A 50-page letter written by Klash was read into the records, explaining the reason for the attack on the priest that amazed this North Saskatchewan city.

SCOTLAND WINS

Glasgow, April 6 (CP Cable)—Scotland defeated England 2-0 at Hampden Park today before a crowd numbering 130,000. The final international soccer clash of the season brings the rose and thistle into a tie for honors, each country having won three games and one tie.

Ireland and Wales were out of the running when they won each.

Scotland maintained a marked superiority over its opponents for practically the entire game, scoring one goal in each half. Dunican, Sleil Derby county winger, was the marksman, heading in twice from corners well-placed by Napier.

While Duncan obtained the goals that give both sides victory, Walker heart of Midlothian centre-forward, was the start of the game. The derby county ace came close second. The Scottish forward played magnificently against a defense that appeared shaky at times.

Brook, Manchester City winger, excelled on the English forward line which, however, was unable to pro duce individual feat-work against the Scottish defence, where Cunningings of Partick Thistle, was the shining light.

Relief Conspiracy Nipped in The Bud

Toronto, April 6—(CP)—What is alleged to have been a marriage-license conspiracy to benefit at the expense of the Public Welfare Department was nipped in the bud today with the arrest of two men and a woman on charges of conspiracy to defraud.

Police officials alleged William Currie, already on relief, loaned his marriage license to Raymond Wandless and Mrs. Barter to enable them to obtain relief under his name as a married couple. Both Wandless and Mrs. Barber also face fraud charges. It is also alleged they obtained vouchers under the name of the Wars of Roses (1455 to 1487). By way of taxes, each landowner gives a thirteenth of his crops to Dictator Hathaway. She accepts no money, prefers to encourage cultivation by demanding produce only. Smokestacks are a liability; for each landowner on his house or shop, every citizen must pay to Mrs. Hathaway a tax collectable in chickens. No property may change hands without her consent, and in the event of such an exchange, she would receive a commission.

No Modernization

In feudal Sark, transportation depends on horse or man-power. The importation of automobiles is forbidden. The island's scenery is among the most beautiful in Europe. Such roads as the one shown in the accompanying layout, cut through brilliantly-hued rocks, are common. Technically citizens of England most Sark natives speak French, all men serve in the militia, and each must spend two days a year helping to fix the roads.

On this woman-ruled island, gas, electricity and running water are unknown. Chief city and port is the Village of Creux. Island is a mile broad, three miles long; population 640, of whom 40 are farmers, the remainder consisting of their families, fishermen and their families, merchants and theirs. The farmers constitute the court of chief pleas, main judicial body of island; still live on original properties given to their ancestors in attachment century by the first ruler (or seigneur) of Sark.

On their statute books, the original rulers of Sark scribbled quaint laws, most of which are still enforced. No one but the island's ruler may keep pigeons; no one but the ruler may keep a female dog. Sark was given to Mrs. Hathaway's ancestors by Queen Elizabeth of England in sixteenth century; she inherited dictatorship from her father six years ago; her husband is regarded as a consort only and has no ruling power.

GIRL MENDS RUN, SHOWS COURT HOW

Sally Blue Appears as 'Operator' in Patent Case

Washington, April 6—An attractive, dark-haired girl held the attention of the Justices of the Supreme Court while she demonstrated how to repair silk hosiery.

Her long lashes drooping, Miss Sally Blue of Clarendon, Va., showed Chief Justice Hughes and his smiling associates how runs, which counsel had described as "very distressing" to luscious limbs generally, could be made to disappear in less than a jiffy.

Earlier, each Justice had been supplied with one magnetic needle, one specialty egg-holder, and one silk stocking, which caused them no little amusement.

Justice McReynolds, a bachelor, held his stocking up full length and then stopped hastily when he discovered what it was.

The hosiery exhibit was in connection with oral argument between counsel for the Scott Company and the Hosiery Motor-men Corporation of New York, over an alleged "run" distinguisher.

Henry Olligan, counsel for Scion told the court the company held patents for repairing by a method which he termed the "weaving system," involving the use of the needle, and the egg-holder.

He suggested that the Justices could best determine what that method was by a demonstration. After obtaining permission he turned to the spectators' benches and said:

"Will the operator please come forward."

As she came forward Mr. Olligan introduced her.

"How do you do?" murmured Miss Blue as the Chief Justice inclined his head with a smile and his associates beamed in kindly fashion.

Miss Blue took from a blue handbag her egg-holder, needle and a spare stocking.

She jabbed the needle rapidly back and forth in the stocking which she had spread over the smaller aperture of the egg-holder and what was a run apparently became sheer silk.

There was more illustration when Hugh M. Morris, counsel for Motor-Mend, began his argument, but he did not have a girl model.

But down there, far beneath the girl and just below the first gentle rise of foothills, Nicholas Sarl and Captain Pat O'Hearn talked excitedly about them. Two nights and a long, restless day had brought them not even an inkling of the course their quarry had taken.

"There's no doubt in my mind," Sarl broke out at last. "He's made for the foothills. The desert offers nothing, either on this side of the line or in Mexico. I had a plane send it over all yesterday, and I've already got men sifted of him in case he slipped up Copper Canyon which he found."

"But if he should," the captain objected, "my brigadier ends at the border. I can't hunt this man on Mexican soil."

LEAFS ON SPOT IN CUP SERIES WITH MAROONS

Hainsworth Will Have to be at Best to Keep Attackers Out

QUITE INDIFFERENT

Every Member of Both Teams Ready For Final Battle

By ELMER DULMAGE

Toronto, Apr. 6 (CP)—At the rate the heavy artillery of the Toronto Maple Leafs is failing to function in major league times, the round-faced these crucial times, the round-faced George Hainsworth, the world's most nonchalant goaltender, may be forced to the extreme measure of turning Montreal Maroons a shutout tonight in Toronto's Stanley Cup hopes are to be realized.

It is at a time like this—one game down, four to go—that the National Hockey champions look to the 37-year-old veteran for help from the records. His response was a string of 2-0, 3-0, 3-1, performances against the Boston Bruins that permitted the Bruins two goals in the four N.H.L. final games.

And as he built this record the Leafs picked up the idea and started to gather. They will be required to get going tonight in the second game of the Stanley Cup series or the Maroons will be so close to the title it won't make much difference.

Hainsworth, a miniature edition of Ontario's Premier Mitchell Hepburn in appearance, has lay down a shutout barricade with greater facility than any goalie in modern major hockey history. It's a hobby with him. He figured since he started out to play competitively about 21 years ago he has scored 103 shutouts.

In his hey-day Alfred he's playing about as well now as he ever did, the canny Hawkesbury, Ont., athlete established a record that may never be approached. He scored 22 goals for Montreal Canadiens in the 1928-29 season in 44 games. He ran up a string of 67 straight victories. In that campaign he allowed 43 goals.

A Great Goalie.

He and Clint Benedict are the only goalies since the war with the distinction of playing for two Stanley Cup winners in succession. Hainsworth did it with Canadiens in 1930 and 1931. Benedict with Ottawa Senators in 1920 and 1921. Just the other day Bill Cook, veteran New York Rangers' great goaltender he had ever played with or against in his thirteen years of hockey.

If anything, Hainsworth has become a better goaltender in late years. He has never taken so long to clear the puck while oncoming forwards swoop in to close-in shots on him. He has reached a point where he seems to know where his eyes will be catching high shots in a gloved left hand.

His apparent indifference is something to appreciate, but so far the Maroons have been unable to get over an easy attitude that is genuine. They have had three goals against the Leafs Thursday night, yesterday afternoon and a little more than 63 minutes in all have been scored in four games.

But don't haven't got George down yet. The outer guards made up of Red Horner and Hap Emms, Clancy, Ray and Bill Hollett, may be lighter tonight. They will have to be if the coaches have not a duel of it in the racking lines instead of a mid-ice checking duel.

Despite minor head injuries to Bob Gracie and Gus Marker, two-thirds of the No. 2 Montreal front division with Herbie Cain, Maroons will be at full strength. Having won the first game in Toronto, Manager Tommy Gorman has admitted he would not be surprised if the redmen pulled off with three straight.

The German forwards, largely because of the excellence of Earl Robertson, Russ Blinco and Dave Trottier, outpointed the Toronto frontliners in the first skirmish. The defence stood out as a steadier guard than Toronto's. Alex Connell in goal was beaten on one long shot and otherwise held his own.

The last defence—Hainsworth and Connell—may decide the issue tonight.

Probable line-ups:

Montreal—Goal, Connell; defence, Wentworth and Siebert; centre, Blinco; wings, Robinson and Trottier; subs, Conacher, Shields, Northcott, Smith, Ward, Marker, Gracie, Cain and Miller.

Toronto—Goal, Hainsworth; defence, Clancy and Horner; centre, Thoms; wings, Pimlgan and Kilrea; subs, Hollett, Day, C. Conacher, Primeau, Jackson, Kelly, Metz, Cotton and Sloan.

Officials—Ag Smith and Eusebe Dalgneault.

WOOD AFTER RECORD

Miami Beach, Fla, April 6.—(AP) Gar Wood, greyhaired, master of motorboat racing, scanned the sky today for weather signs preparatory to putting his Miss America X into Indian Creek for a try at a new world water speed record.

Wood was optimistic over the prospect of setting a new mastery higher than the 124.86 miles an hour he made in 1933 with the Miss America IX.

CURRENT SPORT

DAY BY DAY

To take in the surroundings and get the low down on just what is going on in the baseball circles we accepted Ernie Gibbard's invitation to attend the annual meeting of the O.B.A.A. at Kitchener today. Of course the only two items of interest to immediate local baseball fans is the question of Jack Barclay's transfer and what disposition is to be made of the Napanee "A" team. In reference to the latter we have first hand information from Mr. Gibbard, which will appear later in the column. The usual executive business, election of officers and all amendments to the O.B.A.A. constitution heads the proceedings.

Transfer as the Napanee "A" team's angle is concerned it can now be disclosed, as we no longer feel obligated to our confidence Ernie Gibbard Eastern Ontario O. B. A. representative has been resolutely laboring to form an intermediate "B" group in the Bay of Quinte district supporting clubs from Belleville, Napanee, Brighton and possibly Enterprise. Yesterday the majority of those clubs agreed to play intermediate "B" ball this season. However, Ernie has agreed to place a "B" team in the league, to assure at least four teams, providing they allow his "A" team to play an inter-locking schedule. The Gibbard "A" team will take a boy into the O.B.A.A. intermediate "A" play-downs, but has requested the clubs in the Bay of Quinte loop "B" series to be allowed to play games in their group, the games to count in the standings, but the standard "A" team, no matter where they finish in the schedule, cannot participate in the league play-downs. The same proposition was carried with success in the Bruce County League last season, we understand. There is little doubt but that the Napanee club will be represented in the O.B.A.A. today. For all we know the parent body may have signed on the entire picture when Ernie places the proposition before them.

They say Reggie McNamara, the Australian sprinter, is a "iron man" of six-day bike racing. But consider Cecil Neville, who umpires hard-legged athletes. Neville has acted as head trainer at more than 300 grinds in this country and abroad. McNamara has taken part in 114 races.

Birthday congratulations to Mickey Cochrane, manager-catcher of the Detroit Tigers whom he led to the American League pennant in 1934. It was the first pennant for Detroit in nearly 30 years. Cochrane was sold to Detroit by Connie Mack of Philadelphia for $100,000 at the end of the 1933 season. He was born in Bridgewater, Mass., 32 years ago today.

Officials have been named and all is ready for the gala Golden Gloves boxing tournament at the Armouries on Tuesday. Bert Wells and Harry Robinson have been the names as the third man in the ring and will work alternate bouts, there also has been plenty for one man to handle in one night. Two sets of judges have also been named and include Sergt. Major Wibberly of the R.C.A.F., Geo. Wallbridge, Jack McFee and Dr. Sam Smith. The referees will also alternate so the boxers shall not be subjected to monotonous The bouts are staged under the auspices of the local Kinsmen club with the proceeds going to their charity eye clinic.

With the Golden Gloves boxing tournament on Tuesday night it is doubtful if the city league basketball finals will be played on that night as a matter of fact the noogelers could do worse than play one more game, the Dominos versus the "Y" intermediates and call quits. A sudden death game between the two teams in the city cage title would be just enough to interest the fans, like last week.

Glen Loughlin, manager of Chicago National Hockey League Black Hawks put in 20 years as a professional player, before he decided to decorate the bench permanently. He was 39 when he played his last season as a regular for London in the International League. At 41 he actually took part in a half-dozen of London's games.

The Dal-Nippon Japanese baseball team, visiting in this continent, has brought new ideas of politeness to the baseball world. No umpire's angry they become. The Japanese players always doff their caps to the man who umpires when they get an adverse decision. The umpires are oilely called "mister."

23 ENTRIES FOR BOXING TOURNEY

First Time Golden Gloves Show Held in This City

For the first time in the history of local boxing circles the district Golden Gloves tournament will be held in Belleville with 23 participants entered from various points in the Central Ontario area. Boxers from Belleville, Napanee, Trenton, Airport, Peterboro and Madoc have forwarded signed entry blanks to Promoter Clem Allen. The receipts from the bouts are to be presented to the local Kinsmen's Club for charity purposes, as the card is being presented through the Stewart-Warner-Alemite A.C. under the sponsorship of the Kinsmen Club of this city.

At least fifteen bouts can be assured the patrons of the fight game at the Armouries on Tuesday night, when the Golden Gloves eliminations finals for the Central Ontario district will take place. Every class from the 90 pounders to the light heavyweights has been included with anywhere from two to six boxers appearing in different classes. A novice bout at forty pounds between the Palmatier brothers will be presented as an added attraction to open the show. Matchmaker Clem Allen announced today, that the various winners of his Golden Glove boxing tournament in all classes would be eligible to compete in the provincial Golden Gloves finals at Toronto later this month, official information to that effect being received from the A.A.U. of C., which body authorized the local Golden Gloves tournament.

The feature bout of the evening will be in the 175 pound class, when Hugh Gilmour, Bay Street A. C. Trenton, meets Teddy Bentley of Napanee. The latter is a well known light heavyweight in Eastern Ontario while Gilmour has a K.O. over "Giant" Shulman, pride of the Airport, to his credit. In the lightweight class a splendid quintette of fighters are lined up in what should be the tit bit of the night. The return to a local ring of Gordie Morris, fighting under the R.W.A. A.C. colors and the announcement that Howard "Dynamite" Wheeler would fight in the 126 pound class adds color to the show.

The list of entries to be received by Promoter Allen, including their home clubs, appear below:

40 pounds—Palmatier Brothers.

90 pounds—Jo Samain, S.E.A.C., Jacky Conklin, R.W.A.A.C. and Jack Kid Vieau, Bay Street A.C., Trenton.

118 pounds—Joey Miller, Bay Street A.C., Trenton and Gordie Morris, S.W.A.A.C.

126 pounds — Young Ellis, Bay Street, A.C., Trenton; Len Maracle, R.C.A.F., No. 2; Howard "Dynamite" Wheeler, R.W.A.A.C.

135 pounds—Johnny Teal R.C.A.F. No. 2; Kelly, Bay St., A. C., Trenton; Bob Cook, R.C.A.F., No. 2; Art Angell, Belleville, Bill Crawford R.W.A.A.C.

147 pounds—Gordie Woods, Bay St., Trenton; Ben Edwards, Madoc B.C., "Shorty Fisher", R.W.A.A.C. and Eddie Bruce, R.C.A.F. No. 2.

160 pounds—Bruce Bristol, Madoc B.C., Bobby Wright, R.W.A.A.C.

175 pounds— Hugh Gilmour, R.C.A.F. No. 2; and Ted Bentley Gibbard A.C., Napanee.

The above list of entries is not final, however, while other names will appear in the ring on Tuesday night, it is announced, that under the Golden Gloves rules all bouts must be drawn for one hour previous to the commencement of the programme, Promoter Allen announced today, that negotiations were being opened to include a heavyweight bout on the card, due to the fact he has received only one entry and is endeavouring to procure a belated entrant. The show will commence early and continue late a change in the bouts therefore must be declared that night, making it necessary for some of the participating in the bouts at different times.

James Barclay Given Transfer To Belleville

Kitchener, April 6.—(CP)—Thirty three applications for the transfer of baseball players were dealt with at the meeting of the Ontario Baseball Amateur Association here Friday night, preparatory to the 17th annual convention of that body which will be an all-day affair here Saturday.

Last night seventy-five delegates had registered at a hotel here, and by tomorrow it is anticipated that about 150 will be in attendance at the dinner at which Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn will be the main speaker. The Premier will be accompanied by Hon. Earl Lednin, Minister of Mines, Hon. David A. Croll, Minister of Welfare, and Public Affairs, Hon. Norman Ripel, Speaker of the Legislature, Dr. J. D. Roberts, for Sault Ste. Marie and Nicholas Asmussen, M.P.P., for North Wellington.

The dinner tomorrow will be unique in that German stands will be served entirely, and the menu is to be in keeping. There will give plenty of trouble to the delegates. President Stan Gilbert of St. Thomas, will be at the Association's helm, the post body to the association. Fred Lee, Chairman while President W. A. Smith of Galt, will preside at the annual meeting of the O.B.A.A.

Cleland Resigns

The resignation of R. J. Cleland of Niagara Falls, a member of the O.B.A.A. executive, was received and accepted. He will not be a candidate for re-election.

Following this gathering, the International senior clubs will meet to decide the schedule. The latter body was greatly simplified here by the adoption of the Western International rule A club for senior rating. It is thought Guelph, Galt, Preston, Guelph and the Twin City will form one group and St. Thomas, Hamilton, Stratford and Kitchener another. Whether the two groups will interlock or one interlock with Hamilton likely will be the main division attack at the Intercounty gathering.

Ford of Canada Begins Casting Steel

FORD of Canada has just put its new $425,000 electric furnace foundry at East Windsor into production, and here is Wallace R. Campbell, president, raking the slag from a bucket of molten steel. A moment later the steel was being poured into molds a few feet away, casting alloy steel crankshafts for the Ford V-8. The new foundry, first of its kind in Canada, is producing more than 400 crankshafts a day, enough for the present capacity production of the huge automobile factory. The lip of the fire-ton electric furnace is seen at top left. The man just on the other side of the platform watching the pour is J. S. Beaumont, chief chemist of the company, and in the background is an interested group of members of the Engineering Institute of Canada, who visited the plant.

MINING TRADING HEAVY IN MARCH

McWatters Traded a Million And a Half Shares

Toronto.—Volume on the mining section of the Toronto Exchange in March was the heaviest since last July, transactions totalling 20,301,531 shares against 10,749,275 in February. Sales values also were doubled. Higher London prices for gold and the gold bars rallied in the Ottawa budget provided the stimulant.

Near the close of the month base metal stocks assumed a more prominent position, influenced by advancing copper, lead and zinc prices and the prospect of an agreement among the big world copper producers to further curtail their output. Silver stocks also displayed a firming tendency.

During March 182 issues appeared on the board of which 71 advanced in price while 87 declined and 24 remained unchanged. The most active issue of the senior group were Base-Hughes with 127,625 shares changing hands and Hollinger with a turnover of 110,200 shares. In the industrial group McWatters traded 1,534,640 shares for a gain of 61 cents and Central Patricia traded 654,600 shares on an advance of 17 cents.

TUCK SHOP GORGE INVOLVES HONOR

Edmonton.—A University of Alberta football team visiting station in the field but proved his prowess at quiping ice cream in the tuck shop by eating three brick ice in 25 minutes flat.

Indignant local cynical bystanders who doubted his assertion he could eat a whole brick by himself, the athlete raised the quota to three bricks in 35 minutes and called for wagers.

After the first brick, which disappeared in four minutes, the gridiron star was sternly refused an amendment to the wager by which assistance from the animal fats was to soften while another was eaten. The second brick occupied him seven minutes.

Desperate, the challenger craftily chose a rich cherry and nut mixture as the last hurdle. The ice cream vanished in a flash for an elapsed time of 25 minutes and then called for coffee.

HEALTH RESORT FOR LIVESTOCK

Cattle And Horses Reported Thriving on Pastures

Chaplin, Sask.—Nature has created a health resort for livestock here for the benefit of animals suffering in their own environment, according to Walters of Lake Chaplin who has been known to possess remarkable healing qualities. Sufferers from eczema and other skin ailments have benefited through bathing in the water. Coyotes make the spot their home in the winter time and provide sport for the hunter with car and hounds.

A wealth of mineral salts is to be found in the vicinity of the lake and an analysis has shown the property to contain sodium sulphate of the highest quality. Livestock is exceptionally fond of the mineral and thrive upon it.

With the coming of winter farmers have stored up a quantity of the mineral for use on saltless days. In southern area they have been digging out the Glauber salphate in great quantities and hauling it home to their animals. "It pays them up," they say.

LACK OF SNOW IRKS TRAPPERS

Regina.—Hunters of the prairie wolf in Saskatchewan report meagre bags of the wary animals during the past month in districts where they are known to exist in large numbers.

When deep snow comes it is often faster than hunting dogs and easily makes a getaway. Lack of snow is blamed for the poor returns.

For the same reason, many trappers report a mediocre catch of weasel which will considerably lower the output of ermine for winter fur garments.

Daily Short Story

Hollywood Romance

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

The music wailed a haunting rhythm as they glided onto the polished dance floor of one of Hollywood's lesser known cabarets. He was well-dressed, well-mannered and well-spoken while she was she.

He didn't say: "Where have you been all my life before?" But he did say the conventional: "You look familiar to me."

So she replied: "It sounds like the old line. But I think you mean it this time. As a matter of fact, you seem familiar to me also."

So they finished the dance and sat down and ordered some brandy. Between sips she remarked: "So we look familiar to each other. Well, let's forget the past. I've been trying to forget mine. Let's start from where we are."

And he replied: "I didn't think you had a past—by I mean it in the right way. I mean, I didn't think you were old enough to worry about past misfortunes. And your face doesn't betray lines of worry."

"You speak like an intelligent person," she replied, "and that's rare. What is your occupation?"

"I'm trying to be a writer—for the films," he replied, "and you?"

"I'm trying to be an actress—for the films," she replied. "I'm surprised you didn't guess."

That first meeting was quite naturally the beginning of a romance. They learned each other's names on the next rendezvous — Peggie Golden and Jack Faye. But they were Hollywood names. As most people know by now—hardly anyone retains the original name in Hollywood. It comes from the formed, more euphonious, more rhythmic—anything so long as it doesn't sound natural and human and matter-of-fact. To be matter-of-fact—that's the cardinal crime in the movie capital.

Love and Time!

So love flowered amidst the tinsel of the film town. They learned to know each other's moods—sorrows, and successes.

"I've had another manuscript rejected, Jack" she would say. "Let's drink to it."

"I showed them my pictures and demonstrated for them!" Peggie would say, "but another got the role." And so they had another drink.

In the meantime, each had moved to cheaper quarters and a fear began to creep into their eyes. There is nothing so terrible as fear....especially when one knows it!

Peggie received a letter from home. Of course, she corresponded with her folks. She used to open their mail as one eats food without an appetite. The letter read in part:

"And this latest foible of yours tops everything. To reject everything you have in life for the chance of becoming a movie star —well, there was at least some excuse for it although you know very well your mother's and my opinion of movie stars—even the best of them and the noblest of them.

"You said you wanted to try it without help from your family. Well, that was courageous anyway. You who have been brought up in the finest finishing school, who have fed upon the daintiest foods, who wore only the silkiest and clingingest of fabrics. To try to forget everything — beautiful home, comfort, parties, friends, luxuries—because you thought you were bored and wanted to do something in life. To make something of yourself—so as not to be a parasite. You will recollect these were your own words!

"So what have you accomplished in the past year of anonymity? You succeeded in earning a few dollars as an extra. For the rest —I presume you have parroted a few gems you took along and probably your furs. I could forgive you even that. That was part of what you call playing the game. But the latest—heaven forbid!

"So you have fallen in love with a penniless writer, whose scenarios provide fire for a wintry night! From your letter—you write nothing about him. You hint even that you know nothing about him. He's handsome—well, aren't there enough handsome boys in your class and group? He's intelligent—can't you find enough intelligent boys in your own class and group? It seems to me you should have learned by now how hard it is to live on nothing. If you have failed in your ambition—why don't you do the right thing? Come back and we'll welcome you.

"You have refrained from asking for money, but by the same token I never have assumed the possibilities of disinheritance with you. After all, you are my own. But I tell you candidly — that should you take this step with that penniless unknown then you will be no daughter of mine any longer...."

Peggie tried to be gay at the next meeting with Jack, but he detected her mood. While she tried to hide it, her purse suddenly opened and the letter fell to the floor. Jack picked it up — and noticed the return address. Peggie caught his eye.

"You might as well read it," she said. In pained silence she waited as he slowly perused the letter. Suddenly, he broke into gay laughter.

"We were fools," he laughed as she stared at him amazed, "fools —both of us."

"What do you mean?" she asked. He placed his hand in the inside pocket of his coat and drew out a letter. "Read it," he grinned, "or rather—you can give to read it. Just look at the address and the name. The contents with variations are similar to those in your letter."

They looked at each other for a moment. Then, she began to laugh also.

"Do you remember—when we first met—you said I looked familiar to you—and I said that I believed you," she remarked.

"Yes—" he replied, "and that proves it. No wonder—we live in the same county—and we could drive across from our estate to yours. We probably scooted each other occasionally—but you were away at school and so was I—and in the summers we were always traveling."

"We went a long way—to Hollywood," she said, "to get really acquainted."

"But our parents were right," he replied, "we are both fools — because we are failures. Perhaps we should both return—with a marriage license in our hands. I'm sure if your folks find out who the other party is—there will be no objections—particularly, if we return."

"I agree," she said, "with everything you said—except one. We have not failed because after all our quest was not for success—but for happiness—and haven't we found it?"

And forgetting everyone in the place, Jack rose and kissed Peggie.

MOOSE DELAYS TRAIN

North Bay, Ont., April 5—(CP)—Mrs. Ow Moose, residing somewhere in the Nakina-Armstrong section of Canadian National Railways, acted quite unladylike this morning, in fact, one might say she was extremely stubborn.

Mrs. Ow Moose was ambling along on the railway tracks when "no," the trans-continental passenger train, made its appearance. Did Mrs. Moose get out of the way for the powerful engine? She did not. She simply continued her stroll, and the train was forced to slow up and follow.

By the time Mrs. Ow Moose had decided to change her direction the train was 12 minutes behind schedule.

"This threat of war means we must return home", said Lady Cecil; "the journey to Nepal is no longer safe." Tarzan unwillingly she yielded, for she would not allow Pat to re enchaperoned.

Roger promised their visit with the maharajah's son would be brief. But when the last rough miles into the Mogul's state had to be made by motor-drawn carts, Caroline Cecil regretted leaving Delhi. Even she revived, however, as Prince Ahmed warmly welcomed them.

The splendor of the palace, its gorgeous gardens, and the native pomp were most impressive. That evening Nautch dancers performed in their honor. Lady Cecil, wearied, kept to her room. Pat and Roger were presented to his august Highness.

Instinctively the girl disliked the suave politeness of the maharajah. Nor did the gleam in his wicked black eyes as he looked upon the girl's charms escape her. Afterwards, she said to Roger: "That man is our enemy!"

"Our People Are Without Leaders", Said Chiang in Report, Who Praises Y.M.C.A. And The Child as Integrating Forces

Eugene Turner, one of the Y.M. C.A. secretaries in China called to help translate the official minute of the "New Life Movement," with head office in Nanchang, came across a remarkable statement by Generalissimo Chiang Kai Shek. The statement had come to him in such confidence that he could not use it. Then came an inspiration. China Mail File No. 14c

January 8, 1935

Nanchang, Kiangsi, China (AP)— The unprecedented spectacle of a Chinese ruler extending his active co-operation to foreign missionaries has given hope to missionaries from China that anti-foreignism is soon to become a thing of the past in this country.

In a report address before the executive committee of the New Life Movement Generalissimo Chiang urged upon his followers the importance of seeking the utmost co-operation from the Christian churches represented in China.

"The great need of society in China," said General Chiang, "is an integrating force. In England and America this force is furnished by the churches and similar social organizations, and in Italy and Russia by the Government. China has no such national party (the Kuomintang) has in many places lost public confidence and is not functioning as the needed force.

"Our people are without leaders and for the promotion of this Movement we must co-operate with every possible agency. One of these is the forces of the churches and Christianity the country. These leaders are already up to standards of the New Life Movement. Officials, teachers, students, military and police should co-operate with the Young Men's Christian Association, and the Young Women's Christian Association. Both have been long in service for the churches in our large cities. Where there is no Y.M.C. A. a plan of co-operation with the churches directly should be worked out."

The Bishop's address was very interesting and instructive to the large congregation. The candidates were presented by the Rev. T. H. H. Hall, who is in charge of the missions.

During the service the combined choirs of St. John's Mission and the Carrington Mission, rendered in an excellent manner the anthem "Awake, My Glory" by Shelley. Miss Redgor, the organist, was in charge of the musical portion of the service.

7 SLOT MACHINE CASES ENLARGED

Seven More Cases Will Come up Late This Afternoon

Seven local business men or one half of those alleged operators of slot machines, who had their machines seized by local authorities last Wednesday evening, appeared in the local police court held before Magistrate E. J. Butler K.C., today, due to the absence of defence counsel and at the request of those charged, the hearing was adjourned until 2.00 p.m. this afternoon next.

None of the alleged operators were called to plead to charges read by Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan K.C., each being charged with keeping a common gaming house. The local Police Court rooms were crowded to overflowing while the back adjacent also was filled with curious spectators. According to court officials, the remaining seven to face similar charges, arising out of the organized raid on alleged operators of slot machines in the city, will appear in the local court late this afternoon, at which time these particular cases are expected to be completed.

Mr. Charles A. Payne, K.C., counsel for the defendants to be summoned this morning, was absent from the city this morning, necessitating the postponement.

The machines and premises are still reposing at the police station. Whether the machines will be brought into court as exhibits to demonstrate the Crown's theory,insofar as the operation of them is concerned or not, was not announced by police officials or Mr. Donnan K.C. General belief and talk in the corridors around the police court rooms was to the effect, that the machines would actually be operated during the trial, in order to endeavour proving the prosecution's arguments in the matter.

Thomasburg Odd Fellows Present Veteran Jewels to Three Brethren

On Friday evening, March 29, a number of the members of the Tweed Lodge of Belleville and Tweed were guests of Thomasburg Lodge No. 489 at a Past Grand's night.

Many of the older I.O.O.F.'s were present filling the officers' chairs. In fact all the chairs were filled by P.G.'s and the N.G. chair was occupied by a charter member, who was the first N.G. of Thomasburg Lodge, some forty-three years ago in the person of Bro. Wilber Sharp of Belleville, who carried out the duties quite ably. Before the Lodge was closed, Bro. L. A. Martin, present N.G., took the chair and an interesting programme followed. Several of the visiting brethren gave interesting addresses. Rev. Bro. H. B. Herrington spoke on the "Recovery by change of motive". His sermon the point that in order to reform the old system, people must first be reformed in their hearts by taking Christ as their leader.

Another feature of the evening was the presentation of 25-year veteran Jewels to three of the Thomasburg Brothers: Bros. W. L. Ketcheson, Wm. Grills and W. A. Morton. The jewels were presented by Bro. Dorland Sharp and replies were made by the recipients.

Bro. Gerrish of Belleville Lodge, rendered several interesting and humorous readings. At the conclusion Bro. J. E. Bateman, D.D.G.M. welcomed the visiting brothers and hoped that the visit would be a long and helpful. He congratulated the three Brothers on the honour of being members of the same lodge for twenty-five years and visited them many more years of service in the Order. He also expressed sympathy, on behalf of the Lodge, upon losing members of the Order through death.

After the closing of Lodge, refreshments were served by a social hour enjoyed.—Tweed News.

COMMISSIONER VOICES HIS VIEW

Mr. G. A. Reid Attacks Bill to Cancel Hydro Contracts

"I am strongly opposed to the bill introduced by Premier Hepburn and supported by the Hon. Mr. Roebuck," commented Hydro Commissioner George A. Reid of Belleville, speaking for himself and not for the local Commission he made clear.

"If Mr. Roebuck wants to know what the people think of the hydro contracts and of his present bill, he should consult the executive of the Ontario Municipal Electric Association, whose members represent the municipal Hydro systems who have bought their Hydro plants and are paying for same.

"The government has refused to meet the O.M.E.A., in other words, the cabinet refused to meet the executive of the cabinet. The Government has refused to meet the executive of the O.M.E.A. Mr. Maguire, was the nominee of the O.M.E.A. and was by the way a Liberal in politics, thus very clearly showing that the association is not at all political.

"The Government which we look to as the highest standard of honor in our country can repudiate their contracts whenever they cannot the ordinary man on the street can.

"It appears to me that we are getting in a very precarious position if the legislation goes through, and when those who are in favor of the bill state that the large companies have plenty of money after all it is only individuals who are injured by the handling. For instance a life insurance company may have a certain sum in bonds. It is the individual policy holder who must suffer in the direction that only managers for the policy holders. I am credibly informed that the Hydro Electric Power Commission have a half a million dollars of Hydro and power bonds bought in the last few years and no one can say that they were bought by a large corporation.

"And I personally know some elderly people and widows in this city who have most of their life savings in Hydro and power bonds. If these are cancelled where are the elderly people who are now unable to earn money again headed to?

"Why Mr Hepburn and his colleagues do not make a test case of it in the courts I do not know. I wonder if the people of Belleville and vicinity know what is the Gatineau Power Co. should cut off the power coming from it into this city? There are no other sources of fair for Belleville, for we are not generating here. Then there are our industries going and to light our homes in Central Ontario. There is no other power from this part of the Hydro system to supply what is required for this district.

"Let me refer to a statement of the Chairman of the Commission, Mr. Stewart Lyon, at the Rotary Club and also at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, when he plainly told us we could not depend on the Trent Valley for light and power for this city.

"I would be pleased if the power users consider this question before it is too late.

"If any of the work of the former Ontario Commission has been wasted, or the present Ontario Hydro Commission tell us why every town and city in this eastern part, have a generating plant? Our own profit in Belleville is over $20,000, and in the city of Trenton there is almost $3,000 surplus. The Commission did not get this out of the ground but it is the result of the wise action of the local commissions and of the former Ontario Hydro Commissioners, for these surpluses come in spite of reduced rates and of rates which are many times lower than they were in the United States."

Mr. Reid also referred to the possibility that Quebec might retaliate and shut off Cadieux power export to Ontario. If this were done, it would shut off the power coming into this system of the same cycle as is generated in this system of the Hydro, namely 60 cycle.

I'll CONFESS
. . . . I've never read DICKENS!

I NEVER read "David Copperfield" but after seeing a preview of the picture with some of the members of the Theatre staff, I wanted to chase right out and get the book!

...I didn't know "David Copperfield" was a love story that would touch the hearts of even this hard-boiled audience (and how it did!) or that it was filled with such human characters and such exciting, red-blooded adventure. And I never even suspected that Dickens had written comedy lines and situations that would give W. C. Fields his funniest screen role (he's grand as Micawber!)

George Cukor, who directed "Little Women" has made an even more wonderful picture. And Lionel Barrymore, Edna May Oliver, Maureen O'Sullivan and all the 65 featured players fit their roles like gloves.

I sincerely believe "David Copperfield" will win all awards for the best picture of 1935—certainly it will be the best loved picture of the year.

By all means—see Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "David Copperfield"—words can't express what truly magnificent entertainment is is!

Business Leaders Have Influence Far Beyond Competency Says Stevens

Claims Industry Not Government Responsible For Difficulties

POWER CONCENTRATED

Small Group of Business Leaders Assailed By Member

Toronto, April 8—Leaders of Canada's business and financial life were charged with having an influence in the affairs of this country out of all proportion to their competency and to the services they rendered, by Hon. H. H. Stevens at the annual banquet of the Victoria University Alumni in Burwash Hall Saturday night.

Pointing out that corporation indebtedness had increased out of all proportion to federal debt since 1930, that this corporation indebtedness had increased alarmingly preceding depression despite production increase, the minister charged big business with being more responsible than governments for the troubles from which the country now suffers.

Concentration of control of the business and financial life of the country "in the hands of a small group whose power and influence in the affairs of Canada are in disproportion to their merits as individuals and to the services they render" was largely responsible for the deadlock existing between wealth on the one hand and want on the other, he asserted.

He presented two examples of concentration of control, one a man dominating 39 companies with fixed assets of four and a half billion dollars, the other dominating 31 companies with fixed assets of more than three billion dollars.

"Is such a situation fair to other men and to the public in general?" he asked. "I venture that the direction and control of any one of these companies is a full-sized job for anyman . . . that sort of thing is threatening the economic life of this country."

Industrial Control

Another illustration was a lawyer, president of four companies and director of 22 others, "and I know perfectly well that he is not competent to run any one," he remarked. An investment dealer was president of two companies, director of nine, all but one of which was of an industrial character, he said. Another case was that of a notary who was president of four companies and director of three others, which included a flour mill, a foundry, a construction company, a paper mill, a cold storage plant, an insurance company, a hotel and several financial institutions.

He criticized financial institutions for having made money while the rest of the country suffered in the depression years. It was noteworthy, he said, that while the incomes of all other classes had decreased in the last five years, persons employed by financial institutions paid $1,-500,000 more in income tax last year than in 1929, when business was at its peak. Furthermore the income tax paid by financial corporations had jumped.

"Doesn't that indicate where the concentration of control is in Canada and where the winnings are going?" he asked.

80 Per Cent in Debt

Personal income tax figures for the country as a whole indicated that 80 per cent of the population was "virtually struggling in debt, while a small handful is increasing its income through these depression years."

With a mortgaged indebtedness of 10 billion dollars for a population of 10 million to carry, liquidation of debt was an immediate necessity. He advocated two major steps towards such liquidation, lowering interest rates 50 per cent. or thereabouts, and a readjustment of principal by compromise between debtor and creator. Steps had been taken in this direction but not nearly far enough.

He said he believed that a fair rate of interest on high class bonds ought not to be above three per cent; on sound commercial bonds not above five per cent. and that the ordinary citizens should be able to raise money for mortgages or loans at around five per cent. "or possibly six."

He also advocated that those in control of credit be given "one final chance" to advance money for building purposes and, failing their taking it, that there be established a national construction corporation financed by low interest bonds backed by the Government, to advance money for building purposes. Other proposals were a reforestation program, and a federal mining program which would put young men to work mining wealth from the pre-Cambrian shield.

As for the railway problem, he did not consider this unsurmountable "the first step towards its solution might be a modernization of the railway equipment.

BUCHAN HAPPY TO HAVE PART

Says Social Development Proceeding as Quiet Revolution

London, Apr. 8 (CP)—In an interview in the Sunday Times Sunday, John Buchan said in his opinion "Canada is on the eve of social developments of a far-reaching character."

"We in Britain have been undergoing these social changes for many years but in the Dominion the movement, because of physical circumstances, will be more swift and spectacular," he said. "Rationalizing has taken the place of the casual developments of the old days. In this new state of things the citizen is finding new opportunities as well as new restrictions. He has the task not merely of industrial construction but also of personal adaptation.

"There is always something dramatic in the spectacle of a great nation marching through a quiet revolution to a new destiny," said the distinguished author who will be Canada's next Governor-General. "To have some part in it, even as a watcher behind the scenes—for that will be my role—is a privilege of which I am more proud than I can say."

Referring to Canadian literature, Mr. Buchan said he had not laid the scene of any of his books in the Dominion. "There is still time to make amends," he added.

Mr. Buchan will be accompanied to Canada in October by Mrs. Buchan and their youngest son, Alastair, who is still at Eton. He may have a year at some Canadian university before going to Oxford. They also have one daughter and two other sons. Mrs. Buchan is a second cousin of the Duke of Westminster and distantly related to Canada's present Governor-General, the Earl of Bessborough.

26 KNOWN DEAD IN WHINING TORNADO

Building in Town of 1,500 is Completely Wiped Out

Gloster, Miss., April 8 (AP)—A whining tornado which blew out of the west corner parts of Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama during the week-end left in its path 26 known dead, more than 50 injured and property damage estimated at $300,000.

The funnel-shaped wind struck first at Lake Providence, La., Saturday night. It struck three times at Dolcroz, Gloster and Gillsburg, Miss., and spent its force by striping down around Mobile, Ala., late yesterday.

The main fury of the wind was left in this town of 1,500 population. Not a house in the town escaped damage and 760 inhabitants were affected directly by the storm.

Mayor Louis Kahn said 87 dwellings were blown to splinters, 41 so badly damaged they will have to be razed, 38 other dwelling and 20 business houses partly damaged.

Wrecked One Town

The railroad station, the hotel and three churches were wrecked, the cotton gin, the cotton warehouse and the town water tank were destroyed. Even the cemetery did not escape, tombstones being blown down and shunted from grave to grave. The landscape was strewn with timber, metal roofing, uprooted trees and general debris.

Four white persons and four negroes were killed here and 50 injured. The property damage was estimated at $350,000 by the mayor.

From Gloster the storm struck next outside of the village of Gillsburg, 20 miles southeast of here, where 20 persons were killed, a score injured and 15 homes blown down.

At Lake Providence, La., four white persons and five negroes were drowned when the wind blew over a large boathouse anchored in the Mississippi River, six miles below the town.

Then the wind crossed into the State of Mississippi and hit Dolcroz, a plantation settlement where three negro children were killed. One little negro was blown out of his bed into the night. His body was not found until near noon yesterday.

The Attorney-General, Hon. A. W. Roebuck, K.C., on the floor of the Legislature and on the Radio, has presented the case against the administration of Hydro affairs.

Statements made by the Chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission, Mr. T. Stewart Lyon, appointed by the present Government of Ontario, show clearly that he is opposed to the principle of repudiation and sees no need to raise power rates generally, increase taxes to meet temporary Hydro deficits, or to doubt the financial strength of Hydro. His words, published in the February, 1935 issue of The Bulletin of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario are set out below:

> "We can say for the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission that from the day of the first issue of a dollar of capital, interest has been paid on the due date on all the money that has been provided for these enterprises by private investors. It is a fine thing for Ontario that that can be said. It is a fine thing for Canada. Sometimes we swear to our hurt, and keep our word even though it does hurt, and I hope that the day will never come when we of this country, when we of this province, shall in any way repudiate our bond and our word which is behind our bond."

In the January, 1935 Bulletin the Chairman wrote:

> "It cannot be too often stated, on behalf of the Commission, that in connection with the four systems previously mentioned there has never been any call for the payment of taxes to meet Hydro deficits, nor will there ever need to be."
>
> "It is not too much to say that, financially, the Provincial Hydro-Electric Power Commission, like the Insurance Company which first used the comparison, has 'the strength of Gibraltar.' When business activity again assumes high levels, it will be prepared to sell all the power that industrial Ontario can absorb at prices profitable alike to industry and to the Commission."
> "I think we may safely say now that there will be no need to increase Hydro rates in any general way to provide the funds for the payment of power the Commission is forced to accept from the Quebec contractors."

Whatever the accuracies and inaccuracies of the warring political factions of the municipally-owned Hydro may be, the fact—and the central and unalterable fact—is that repudiation of power contracts approved by the Government of Ontario would be unwise, unfair and unprofitable.

UNWISE because competent engineers know that Hydro must some day generate or purchase more power;

BECAUSE it takes from two to seven years to build a generating plant at great cost while industry languishes for power;

BECAUSE power dumped in the Province of Quebec will give competitive advantages to industry and workers in that Province and may set up a migration of industry from Ontario in that direction;

UNFAIR because the pledged word of Ontario must be worth more than "a scrap of paper";

BECAUSE might cannot make right and the Premier and Attorney-General surely cannot persist in their attitude of being judge, jury, plaintiff and defendant in this matter affecting the welfare of thousands of their fellow-citizens;

BECAUSE the privileges of the courts where a non-political and unbiased decision can be rendered are being denied to the power companies and the bondholders;

UNPROFITABLE because already tens of millions of dollars of security values have been wiped out; values which represented the purchasing and borrowing power of Ontario taxpayers;

BECAUSE economic recovery cannot proceed in the face of contracting markets and falling quotations for securities and in the face of disillusioned investors in Canada, Great Britain and the United States who will doubt our promises to pay;

BECAUSE passage of this legislation will cost you money in lost jobs and in higher taxes far beyond any prospective rises in power costs; and note again the statement of T. Stewart Lyon, Chairman of Hydro, that "I think we may safely say now that there will be no need to increase Hydro rates in any general way to provide the funds for the payment of power the Commission is forced to accept from the Quebec contractors."

This proposed repudiation of contracts should not be made a political matter. It affects the honour and integrity of the people of Ontario.

We cannot believe that the points emphasized in this announcement have received the consideration they deserve by all members of the Ontario Legislature. Please give this matter thought. You, as a taxpayer, are vitally concerned. When you have made up your mind as to what you think should be done, write at once to your Member at the Parliament Buildings, Toronto, and tell him what you think about it.

UNEMPLOYED VETERANS' CASE

The problem of the unemployed ex-service men in Canada is one of those tragic comments on the Great War which calls for attention. Men fought and suffered for the cause of the youth to-day of a nation, and yet many find themselves unable through lack of employment to fill the part which they undoubtedly were destined to play in the life of their country. At least they were destined to defend their country and empire in the war of fifty-two months, when nine million men lost their lives, and twenty-three million others suffered wounds or sickness, out of sixty-five million men who were the pawns of warfare.

Today the Dominion Command of the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League has taken up the challenge of these lost number who have fallen on days when there is not work. It must not be forgotten that many of these men gave up the most glorious days of youth to bear arms and the burden of civilization.

They are asking that the Government of Canada care for these men until employment may be secured. It is suggested that there should be a combination of government and local aid; that in any such scheme there should be provision made for the proper pressure on men who do not avail themselves of opportunity of profitable labor within their capacity if such is available; that until such a scheme becomes effective, that the age limit under Veterans' Allowance Act should be reduced, (it stands at present at sixty), in order to take care of those men who are on in years who cannot quickly and profitably be absorbed in ordinary employment; that the government should accept responsibility, if need for assistance, at least to aid in securing employment for all deserving, ex-service men of good service record, that after all avenues of possible employment have been explored there will be still a large residue which cannot be economically absorbed and it will be necessary to devise employment which the government could be called be the responsibility of whatever organization is set up to deal with the rehabilitation of these men by means of the development of special industries, even then it is claimed there will still be many who cannot be provided for, and it is urged that for these there should be considered the possibility of developing small holdings for men who are physically incapable of sustained labor.

These are some of the matters being brought the attention of the Government for a decision on the basis that the unemployment of ex-service men is a matter somewhat distinct from the ordinary unemployment problem.

A SPRINGTIDE REVERIE

This seasonal poem by Miss Lilian Leveridge, well-known Canadian author, has more than a seasonal interest and more than a mere expression of springtide felicity. There comes the sombre reflection that at this very time of returning verdure and beauty, the peace of the world is again threatened by the spectre of war.

This metrical appeal for the cultivation of the spirit of peace bears poignant interest because of the fact that during the Great War a brother of the author, Lieut. Jack Leveridge, died with his life the sacrifice of patriotism and thereby inspired Miss Leveridge to write that most tenderly beautiful of war lyrics, "Over the Hills of Home." Another brother, who was in action at Passchendaele was taken prisoner after the battle and suffered all the miseries of more than a year in a German military camp. With that background of sorrowful memory, this poem has been written:

A Springtide Reverie

The steely grip of the frost's pale fingers
Is slackened and loosed, and the Earth is free.
Now never a touch of his chill breath lingers
To quench the flame of her ecstasy.

She speaks in melody, laughs in flowers,
Such mirthful madness who can resist,
Or the lyric dance of her shimmering showers
On blade and blossom by warm winds kissed?

There is joy reborn in each Spring's returning,
For love grows animate, far and near,
In music and fragrance and colour burning
With mystic fires from the circling year.

But a sigh is heard in the winds unresting,
A sigh of anguish, a thrill of dread;
And through the silence our hearts go questing
To the far, dim valleys where love lies dead.

How can love live in the War-fiend's shadow?
His glance is deadly, his breath a curse,
He walks, and the bloom is gone from the meadow;
The harvests fall from the fields—and worse!

A human harvest in youth's rare splendour
For this is his ravenous, mad desire.
Passionate, ruthless, undimmed, unender
Are his gloating eyes with their baleful fire.

What are we doing? Arise, my brothers!
Let us fight this monster with all our powers.
Our sword, compassionate love for others,
Till the whole earth blossoms with Love's spring flowers!

—Lilian Leveridge.

SCIENTIFIC ANIMISM

If there is one thing of which science is certain it is that all things are ordained to come at length to that change which to one of length, to that change which to the men call death. Not even our universe, the astrophysicists tell us, is exempt from this sweeping law. Yet there are men, whom colleges have dignified with the title of "doctor," who would put their puny intellects against the immeasurable mind of the cosmos. Such a one lives in Berkeley, California.

Surely only in experiments which a certain doctor is now conducting, in a laboratory under the sunny skies of the south, come under the designation of the astrophysicists tell us, is exempt from this sweeping law. Yet there are men, whom colleges have dignified with the title of "doctor," who would put their puny intellects against the immeasurable mind of the cosmos. Such a one lives in Berkeley, California.

Surely only in experiments which a certain doctor is now conducting, in a laboratory under the sunny skies of the south, come under the designation of the scientific animism of which scalpels, his electric currents and his drugs, seeks to find the matter the source of the mysterious force called life. Far wiser would he be if he turned to the study of psychology or of physics and learned there of the humble before the mysteries of mind and of the electron. He is not twentieth-century science. He is an atavist who belongs to those misnamed "rationalists" who sought to find in the brain the sources of intelligence, and sacrificed countless animals in vain.

With unconscious blasphemy—and the laws of nature have never yet been known to accept ignorance as an excuse—he names these poor unfortunate animals, which he half-kills and then restores to consciousness, after Lazarus. An astute publicist, he knows that the name will catch the public fancy, and draw attention to his experiments. And also to his failure. He has proved nothing. He has not conclusively shown that the animals he has restored to a miserable partial consciousness were dead.—Hamilton Spectator.

SUNDAY RADIO BROADCASTING

The Canadian Radio Commission takes a courageous stand in placing a ban on sales talk or spot advertising on Sunday over Canadian stations.

The only fly in the ointment is that the sales ballyhoo on the Sabbath will still be with us to a diminished extent after the Radio Commission's decree becomes effective, since American broadcasting stations will continue to talk shop on the day that should be devoted more to the spiritual side of life.

One becomes rather disgusted at times with the unpleasant admixture of Sunday radio programs. A twist of the dial brings in a solemn church service. Probably another station next to the one you're listening to is extolling the merits of a particular brand of cosmetics. Often there is that rule-breaking of the commercial aspect into the religious. Not only is it distracting, but it frequently turns the listener against the product which is recommended with a line of chatter that borders on the ridiculous.

Publications, containing news let alone advertising, are forbidden by law to publish on Sunday. That is as it should be. Therefore, it is quite proper that radio advertising which is a pure money-making proposition should also be taboo.

The prohibitive step taken by the Canadian Radio Commission on Sunday advertising is certainly in the right direction.—Kitchener Record.

FOR A MAY COMMISSION

The proposal of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce that a Royal commission be established in Canada on the lines of the May Commission in Great Britain to survey the whole field of governmental expenditure, the object of indicating where and how economies can be effected is one that cannot but interest the Canadian taxpayer. It is a policy which was advocated in The Montreal Star repeatedly during the past two years as best calculated to bring about those financial reforms in national expenditure without which this country can never go forward with confidence in the future.

It will be recalled that it was largely due to the conditions revealed by the report of the May Commission and that of the Macmillan Commission—reports warning and urgency—that the British Government went off the gold standard, cleaned its economic house, and, by dint of widespread economies and careful readjustment of taxation, balanced its budget and paved the way for a return to recovery.—Montreal Star.

A CALL TO THE HIGHLANDS

I wish that I could see the Appin shore
And breathe the salt sea breeze once more,
And hear those haunting Gaelic songs once more,
And watch the wild deer bounding in the glen.

What ecstasy to stand upon a height,
Feeling at one with air and sea and sky,
With Morven hills majestic in their might
Shadowing as the sun begins to lie.

Some day I'll leave the busy town behind
Returning to the Highlands that I love,
And cast the city life from out my mind,
Unfettered as the open sky above.

Then I shall stand upon that Appin shore,
Feeling the sea's salt breeze once more again,
Hearing those haunting Gaelic songs once more,
Watching the wild deer bounding in the glen.

JOE SHORT is a fisherman of fishermen, but so much time and effort is wasted in fishing by folks who do not know how to fish in order to get the most out of the pastime, that Joe has decided to leads Joe to surmise that a few lessons in the art of fishing would help diffuse more joy among a greater number of folks than most anything else which could be imagined. Fishing is a great sport and the brightest spot in many lives. Good fishing brings in many visiting sportsmen and much money is spent locally in consequence. Hence good fishing is very important to this district. And so, a meeting has been called for Wednesday evening, April 17, in City Hall, Belleville, where experts will show fine and fancy fly casting, and a discussion will take place as to the best means of protecting adjacent fishing grounds and improving the fishing so as to make the Bay of Quinte region the mecca of true fishermen from all parts of the world. Hastings has many lakes where fishing has been sensational—some of these lakes are being fished out through various means and fail to sustain their previous reputation. Without regulation and observation the fishing of Hastings will soon become as poor as other districts where fishing for sport, commercial fishing and fishing for food have collided. Before this happens it is well to take stock and take steps to prevent such a calamity.

THE WILD, WILD WEST, in the days of Deadwood Dick and Calamity Jane, immortalized in the Beadle Half Dime and Dime Library, where life rested on hair triggers, was thought to have reached the highest possible peak of free public homicide and "accidental" death from lead poisoning, but the daily death roll today in the United States from gun play as well as motor car accidents, is far worse than anything the old west could possibly produce. Somebody is killed in the United States every forty-five minutes, violently, in passion, or in cool, premeditated gangster fashion in fulfillment of the underworld code that "dead men tell no tales." Thirty-two victims of murder a day brings the United States right up to a point the highest of any civilized nation—and that means today, not in the California of the Forty-niners, nor the promiscuous shooting in the many mining camps since between the Pacific and the Rockies. The annual homicide rate for the United States is nine for every 100,000 of the population, an increase of more than 11,000 slayings a year. Auto fatalities in United States are more than 30,000 a year. Fifty thousand deaths a year from gangster bullets and reckless motor car driving is too high a price to pay for national inefficiency and carelessness.

"If your father got a gallon of milk from each of ten cows and half a gallon from each of another ten cows how much milk would he sell to his customers?" the teacher asked Tommy, the local milk vendor's son.

"About twenty gallons," Tommy replied.

"You don't know much about arithmetic if that's the best you can do," the teacher remarked.

"And you don't know much about the milk business if you think he'd sell only fifteen gallons," Tommy replied.

MAKE A GOOD SELECTION OF CHILD RHYMES

Many Tales Should be Eliminated From The Child's Training

By Lewis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D. Famous physician and Psychology.

(Copyright, 1935, King Features Syndicate Inc).

At first thought one would think that nothing could be less material than a nursery rhyme. "Merely for a child's amusement a bed time story," we think.

Exactly! And that is just where he perniciously possibilities enter. We place in our children's hands all sorts of jingles and stories without first reading them ourselves; without studying them, or inquiring whether they contain material that may have bad influence on the development of subconscious mind.

In point of fact, many children's tales should be eliminated from a child's training even though they are old and hallowed. Even some of the venerated Mother Goose rhymes should be severely censored.

We have been teaching tales like "Tom, Tom, the Piper's Son" "Jack and Jill" "Simple Simon met a Pieman" and "Rock-a-Bye-Baby" without considering the subconscious ideas or the impressions they might leave upon our children's thoughts.

Some of the traditional nursery rhymes unquestionably possess a demoralizing quality. Consider the following.

"Tom, Tom the Piper's son
Stole a pig and away he run.
The pig was eat and Tom was beat
And Tom went howling down the street."

In this typical jingle we have a combination of bad grammar, bad moral precepts and the inculcation of the pernicious idea that corporal punishment is the best method of chastisement for naughty children.

Thus, unwittingly, we teach our children such things while in the same time, we try to make plain the why and wherefore of the rules grammar and try to impress on their youthful minds the value of social and ethical standards.

Guinking child would be puzzled. For thinking child would be puzzled. For we, as adults, in this case, are not consistent with our teaching. Worst of all, everything we put into a child's mind in some measure influences his entire character.

Fortunately, many nursery rhymes are in the best of grammar and are not subversive in any sense, of the highest of moral standards.

Let us not hesitate to upset tradition when it does not conform to our modern standards. Obviously, many of the accepted Mother Goose haughtiness, trickery, running away when it does not conform to our modern concepts. Obviously, many of the accepted Mother Goose stories are out-of-date and not in step with the theories of advance pedagogics.

In the last analysis, parents should not take any individual's recommendation of the worth of the stories the children are given to read. Too much of juvenile reading matter deals with stories of from home all traits that have naughtiness, trickery, runing away no place in developing character.

Let us remember that a child is guided even more by what he reads than what he is taught by his parents or teachers. For we must bear in mind that the guiding influence of the printed page is greater than that of the spoken word.

With this in mind, the parents should always read the book first.

Smuggling of Onions and Other Food From Canada to U. S. Worries Guards

Tariff Shuts Out Cheap Canadian Vegetables

By DANIEL L. WELLS!

Central Press Canadian Writer

Detroit, April 8—Prohibition has run customs officials of their staff while profitable trade, have found a new one—they are smuggling! Onions coming from Canada to the United States.

The Detroit river, international boundary between Michigan and Canada, once teeming with liquor-laden boats, now is the battleground between customs agents and illicit traders of a new era—the vegetable smugglers.

It has all been brought about by customs officials say by the shortage of crops in the United States, the high American tariff on bountiful harvest in Canada.

Confiscations Large

Customs agents recently confiscated in one week 428 bags of onions, containing 50 pounds each, Walter S. Petty, acting collector of customs, said.

The onions represented only $214 in Canada, but would have brought $1,177 in Detroit's market places. Onions cost 50 cents a bag in Windsor, but sell for $2.75 a bag in Detroit. The tariff which importers would have to pay on each bag is $12.50, high enough to exclude foreign onions.

The seized bags later were sold at public auction, all 428 of them, at prices little higher than the Canadian rates. They netted $667 altogether, the auction was conducted by the federal customs officers and commission men attended the sale and took part in the bidding.

Other Food Smuggled

Onions are not the only food found in the smuggler's boats. There are cargoes ranging all the way from cabbage to squash. Butter running nets 15 cents a pound for the smuggler, but cheese, because of the great differential in prices here and in Canada, are the most profitable for the smugglers.

The customs border patrolmen have girded for war.

Housewives, having learned the benefits of shopping in Windsor are driving there by bridge or tunnel, filling their cars with food, and returning. To the customs inspector they say they have "paid a visit to a friend in Windsor" and that the shopping was incidental.

This is difficult to combat. Petty said, Persons returning from Canada can declare $100 worth of goods, provided the purchase was made during their visit. But the law provides they can bring in this $100 cargo also once a month.

Rewards to the smugglers are as great as to the old liquor prohibition days. The profit on an average load is $500, and this enticing figure has lured many an old-time liquor smuggler into the new racket. Some of the old transporters of giggle water are now in legitimate business, Petty said, but those who have found no new trade have turned their old boats into onion scows.

Already one of the leaders of the new onion-smuggling gang has been arrested, and awaits trial in federal court. He is Leo "Frenchy" Shovan, one-time boss of a rum ring. When he faces the judge on the onion charge he will have two previous six-month sentences against his record, both for liquor-smuggling. He faces a prison term and a fine if convicted of onion-running.

Detroit storekeepers and commission merchants are shown with some of the 428 50-pound bags of onions which they bought at a customs house auction after they had been seized from smugglers by the border patrol.

DEBATE SLATED ON POWER BILL

Members Face Busiest Week of the Entire Session

Toronto, April 8 (CP)—The bill Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn introduced in the Ontario Legislature last week to terminate contracts with Quebec power companies was slated for debate today as members returned to Queen's Park to face the most strenuous week of the session.

Premier Hepburn announced last week lengthy night sessions will be held the first three nights of the week and they will last until two or three o'clock in the morning in an effort to achieve Easter prorogation.

Chief items on the Legislative program for the week will be the power contracts debate and the budget debate which resumes tomorrow. Attorney-General A. W. Roebuck's labor legislation has yet to receive second reading and the Police Centralization Bill must be discussed in committee.

Conservatives are expected to attack the Power Bill. The Hydro Electric Commission Act, 1935. Col. W. H. Price (Cons., Toronto-Parkdale) denounced the measure during his budget speech Thursday and said he would have something more to say when the bill was under discussion.

It was expected three other Opposition members, Leopold Macaulay, York South; Winfred Heighington, Toronto-St. David and Arthur Ellis, Ottawa South, would be heard early in the debate.

Frank Lawton, Roland Young and W. C. Fields in "David Copperfield" at the Belle until Wednesday.

RETREAT OPENS AT ST. MICHAEL'S

Rev. Father Knox S. J. Conducts Services For Two Weeks

The Retreat, given by Rev. Father Knox, S.J., opened Sunday in St. Michael's Church. The missionary spoke at the various Masses and outlined the functions of a Retreat. Sunday afternoon the children of the parish assembled in the church at three o'clock and were addressed by Father Knox on their part in the series of devotions. Special prayers were recited and hymns sung. Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament was given by Rt. Rev. J. P. Nicolen, V.G.

On Sunday evening the church was filled by the women and girls of the parish. The eloquent missionary spoke on the love of God for His creatures and stressed Divine providence which follows us through life and into eternity. He emphasized the necessity of returning this love by giving Him our hearts and using the faculties of body and soul in His service.

Hymns were sung and special prayers recited for the success of this Retreat. Benediction was given by Rev. J. J. Collins. The women's Retreat concludes on Thursday evening and the men's begins on Friday evening at seven thirty, continuing until Wednesday evening of Holy Week. Masses each morning are celebrated at six, seven, eight and nine o'clock.

Father Knox became a member of the Catholic Church in England, entering the Jesuit Order and is known as an eloquent pulpit orator. During the war he served as chaplain of the Canadian forces overseas. He has been engaged in preaching missions with great success in Canada, his labours taking him from coast to coast.

EXPECT ELECTION LATE IN AUGUST

Parliament May Adjourn End of Week For Easter Recess

Ottawa, April 8 (CP)—Parliament today starts the final period before a long Easter adjournment. It may be that by the end of the week members will be on their way home. If not then, the House will close soon after next week, the date to be determined, probably, by agreement.

The adjournment will not be one long holiday, however. The general election feel is in the air, and members will use the interval in preparing for the struggle to come. The test, according to general expectation, will not be held until late in August or early in September.

For the government the adjournment will be one of preparation for renewal of the session. The Mass Buying report with its many important recommendations must be digested. Determination must be made as to whether or not legislation implementing some or all of three recommendations will be brought down.

DANZIG THWARTS NAZI AMBITIONS

Dictatorship is Rejected Through Large Vote Polled

(By Melvin K. Whiteleather)

(Copyright 1935, by the Asso. Press)

Free City of Danzig, April 8 (AP) —A handful of Danzig residents with the spirit of Teutonic knights had succeeded today in thwarting Nazi ambitions to create a dictatorship in this free city as a step toward its reunion with the fatherland.

Nazis, while polling approximately 60 per cent. of the vote in yesterday's election, fell considerably short of the two-thirds majority required to wipe out opposition parties and make themselves supreme in the city's political life.

Approximately 93,000 Danzig voters, the majority of them German Catholics and Socialists, combined to drown the hopes of Adolf Hitler-ism. The defeat was the first real defiance Naziism has encountered since it attained ascendancy in the Reich.

Defence Alibi Of Hauptmann Badly Shattered

Milwaukee, April 8 (AP)—Federal authorities today considered a new chapter in the Lindbergh baby and Hauptmann, a chapter purporting to blast much of the Sheriff carpenter's defence alibi to the kidnapping of Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr.

The Rev. Michael J. Kalkok, 42-year-old Catholic priest, told Government agents Hauptmann studied reports of Lindbergh's Hopewell, N. J., estate even before it was constructed and he had seen him often riding horseback in the woods of with the man under death's sentence for kidnapping the Lindbergh baby, despite the priest's fear of notoriety and harm. He was pastor of the Trenton Church from 1926 to 1931, and since has been pastor of St. Joseph's Church in Dudaby, Milwaukee suburb.

Federal agents were to turn the priest's story over to Col. Norman H. Schwartzkopf of the New Jersey State Police who will determine future steps. In Trenton, Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, widow of the stable-owner who died in September, 1931, said she remembered her husband had told her the priest was a frequent visitor at the stable.

Weddings

McGOWAN—STEWART

Trenton, (Special)—St. George's Anglican Church, beautifully decorated with masses of white blossoms, was the scene of a smart Springtime wedding on Saturday afternoon when Muriel Bessie, daughter of Flight-Lieut. Reginald Stewart and Mrs. Stewart, of Kenton, Middlesex, England, became the bride of Flying Officer Erwin Archibald McGowan, Camp Borden, son of Major J. T. Beauty Expert Gives Factors to Think About in Re-Arranging The Hair

(The Beauty Box)

Marion Nixon

She considers her profile in arran ging her coiffure.

By HELEN FOLLETT

Now and then every woman is seized with a frenzied desire for a new coiffure. Something different; a change.

Usually it's the same old brain blanket.

Away she flies to the beauty professor. She carefully regards the shape of her nose, inspects the quantity and quality of her hair. He takes a squint at her profile, considers the width of her cheek bones, frowns in casual scrutiny of her figure. The plump gal can't grab off the hairdress that rightly belongs to the string bean shape.

The sandonna parting isn't suitable for the frivolous femme and floating tresses are not for the one who must dash to the bus every day to bring home the bacon. Ringlets make middle age look silly and kittenish. So it goes.

To do away with enlarged pores, one must change the very fabric of the skin. It can't be easy do. The condition may be inherited, may come through neglect or abuse, or a diet containing too much fat or starch.

Get out of doors every day of your lives, brush it. If you don't you'll go stale. The complexion needs air. Don't eat, don't say a petite won't be zesty, spirits will droop and the bottom virtually will fall out of the world.

Getting into a rut is a good way of spoiling facial creases, losing one's enthusiasm.

Nothing like a sense of well being to put starshine in the eyes and apple blossoms in the complexion.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

Woe's Luxury Provides Meat and Drink for Those Who Glory in Self-Indulgence

Copyright 1935

King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Do you happen to recall Thomas Moore's question: "I'll take the luxury of woe"? Apparently "woe" is in highly popular favor with a good many young people who haven't anything to be miserable about. It's mean drink to them —a snack to be taken at all hours.

In a certain pigeon-hole of my desk are the letters of twenty letters from young people, all signed "Woe-ful." There seems to be no particular reason why a youngster who has a good home, indulgent parents, opportunities to make friends and innumerable other blessings should not be happy. But maybe a little jolt might be the right medicine.

It's so much easier to grieve, gloom or grouch than to snap right out of it; so much easier to curl up comfortably in an easy chair by the fire and "take the luxury of woe" than to brace up and throw it out in some good wholesome exercise.

And there is a remedy for depression of spirits that is old enough to have the value of genuine antiquity. Dr. Johnson touched it out in splendid language, but the lowdown on it is: "When you're unhappy, do a kindness for some one less fortunate than yourself".

"But that's so goody-goody," you contend. "And if you only knew the real trouble I'm in you'll agree I'm entitled to be miserable. So has everyone else in the world had trouble, my dear children. And, if you only knew it, everyone is so much more interested in his or her troubles than they are in yours.

"Laugh and the world laughs with you, weep and you weep alone" as a very wise poet has reminded you. And you don't have to go as far as weeping to lose your husband and your boy and girl friends. You need only be a mildly depressing influence to find yourself about as welcome anywhere as an attack of influenza.

You can feel the barometer of a room rise when certain people enter it. They may not be handsome, rich or influential, but they may have none of the crashing qualities, but when they come into a room, the atmosphere changes and the party begins.

The same is true about the home. It's the whining and complaining wife who sends her husband out for a little cheer. He may get it out of a glass, the society of some amusing woman, or one of those dreary places where they keep racing sheets and sell tobacco, but at least the atmosphere is not damp with unshed tears, the room chilled with unspoken reproaches.

After all, isn't tasting the luxury of woe a species of self-indulgence? Suppose we try taking the pledge on that particular vice?

How Long Should It Take To Measure Your Love?

How long does it take to be sure that love is the real thing? Can it be measured in terms of every weeks and months?

Does love at first sight need to be tried and tested, surrounded by all types of prudent safeguards? Or shall we joyously accept the heavenly thing and take its future for granted?

It is true that we don't ask a rose to prove it is a rose. When a lark sings, we don't stop it and argue—we simply listen in wonder.

But, you will remind me, love is one thing and marriage another. And marriage would be serious if it merely involved the whole of two lives, if it didn't also involve, as it does, children, parents, friends, a whole human network. Yes, marriage is a condition in which two lovers, however ecstatically happy, however confident of their own hearts, must take time to think twice or even ten times. Shall we consider this a hint?

A blissful young pair whose names are Harry and Maybelle have written me a joint letter to ask what reasons there are, if any, for delaying their marriage plans.

"We have known each other," they confide, "three weeks. We met at a party. After our first glance we both felt the same way and when we were talking and drifted into each other's arms we both knew. Can you explain it? Inside of an hour, though we hadn't really said much, we were promised lovers and the whole problem of life was solved for both of us.

"Up to that time, although we had dime quite a bit of petting, neither of us had thought so much about real love. So it came like a divine stroke of lightning.

"Fortunately, we don't have to wait because of money reasons. We can manage to live in a small apartment and have a little bit ever. And now that we know we adore each other, we don't want to spend any more days apart from each other than we have to. But our relatives say, 'Wait! Wait! Be sure.' What do you say?"

I believe that Harry and Maybelle are not mistaken in their love. But I also think that their marriage will be more satisfactory if they first learn to know each other better, study each other's taste's and temperaments.

And as a limit for this delicously happy period, I suggest two months. Nothing is lost, but something surely will be gained, and the parents will be pacified.

But though I am certain this advice is wise, and though I earnestly beg Harry and Maybelle to follow it, even if these young lovers do surrender to their hearts' desire and elope next week, I must whisper that they will not thereby forfeit my blessing!

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

THANKS, ALWAYS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

When spending an evening at a friend's home, and the friend's husband helps your coat when leaving, should you thank him.

H.

Yes. We always thank for a courtesy that is done for us. Always, if we have been well-bred. If we say thank-you we show that we are sensitive to the social amenities.

Answering the Invitations

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Will you please tell me the correct way to answer an invitation to a bridge tea, to be given at a hotel? Is it correct to use one's own calling cards for this purpose? If so, how should this be done. 2. If the calling card is used, should it be mailed in a small envelope?

1. How we answer a bridge invitation depends upon the distance a note, we answer it "in kind"; that is by a note. A note. However, I judge from your second question, that the invitation you refer to is one written on a visiting-card. And this should be answered in the third person:

Mrs. George Murray
accepts with pleasure
Mrs. Edward Worthington's kind invitation

on Tuesday, the first of November at two o'clock.

2. No, It is not correct to answer an invitation on your visiting-card. The invitation is not a call. The acknowledgment on the first page, should be written. And I have indicated in my first answer.

2. When a visiting-card is used for an invitation or for any similar use, it is mailed in a small envelope.

The Wedding Announcement

1. I am going to marry a man who has been married before. Will you kindly tell me how the announcement cards should read? Should I use the first name with which our parents live. 2. Should one send the announcement cards or should the cards be sent by my parents?

1. The best form is for your parents to announce the marriage like this:

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Allen have the honor to announce the marriage of their daughter to Mr. Frederick Grant on Tuesday the first of April
Nineteen hundred and thirty-five
Boston

2. Your parents send them. The fact that you do not live in the town in which they live does not make any difference.

Invitation to Dramatization

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Is it correct for a girl to tell a boy she is glad to have met him? 2. When a boy tells me he is glad to meet me, should I say anything more than "Thank you"? 3. On what occasions should I offer my hand when introduced to other young people my own age, or to my friend's? 4. Is it correct to offer my hands when introduced to anyone on the street? 5. If introduced to several people at the same time, with others, shall I rise or remain seated? 6. When someone enters a room where there are several strangers, what is the proper form of introduction? 7. Is a written acknowledgment in "How do you do" sufficient? 8. Is it correct to add, "I am glad to meet you"?

Betty.

1. Yes. There is no "gender" connected with such a pleasant comment. Just say, "I am glad" from the point of view that one individual should make a friendly statement to another individual.

2. Yes. The "thank you" is a courteous reply and means that you appreciate the comment. But you wouldn't say, "I am glad" which seems as if the pleasure of the meeting were all on one side. You add, "I am very glad to have met you too", or "It was a pleasure to meet you too", or "I am very happy to have met you too, Mr. Robinson."

3. Offering to shake hands is a very personal thing and depends entirely upon our relationships and relations. Some people are so cordial and enthusiastic that they very naturally offer to shake hands when they are acknowledging an introduction. Others are not essentially interested in this gesture. Also the customs varies in various parts of the country, some communities being more handshaking conscious that others.

Some suggestions about handshaking: Usually, in a formal introduction, one does not shake hands. The man waits for the woman to make the first move about this—waits until she offers to shake hands. In a social gathering, being introduced to an older woman, would also wait until the older woman offered to shake hand. A hostess and a host shake hands with their guests when the guests arrive and when they leave.

4. Yes, if you wish to register special pleasure in the introduction. But usually street introductions are of a casual nature, and one simply bows and says, "How do you do."

5. If a man is being introduced to a woman, and the woman is seated, she does not rise. If a girl is being introduced to an elder woman, she should rise. If two women are being introduced to each other, the first is presented to the other, they may rise if they wish.

6. The very best form to use when we acknowledge, formal an introduction-fi: "How do you do." This is the most correct form. If we do, it may continue, if we wish, "It is a pleasure to meet you, Mrs. Graham or I have heard such delightful things about you from our mutual friend, Miss Allen." This begins the conversation. But it is not part of the acknowledgment. That is, we don't write the acknowledgment of an introduction as follows: "How do you do." Say the "How do you do" first. This is the correct form.

AT THE DANCE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

When a young man asks a girl for a dance, and the girl says he is, what should she answer? The dance is a few dances ahead.

Something like, "I am looking forward to it." I will be delighted to dance with you."

Fashion Flashes

Copyright 1935

King Features Syndicate, Inc.

Too much sun isn't popular with many of us, but there is why we like big-brimmed hats. The enormous brim, also most becoming, is used in a hat of the moment. Fashioned in straw with a trim of brown belting ribbon embroidered with yellow and orange angora.

Don't think that coats have been neglected, despite the warmer days outside. Among the many new coat models for early Spring is a coat in soft, woolly green, with sleeves with enormous sleeves of leopard skin and a small turn-down collar of the same fur.

What about a new evening bag to complete your Spring costume? A charming model is in white chiffon, embroidered in seed pearls and finished over a foundation of flesh pink faille.

A pearl among accessories is the pearl cuff bracelet. With her evening frock, one smart woman wears a bracelet of pearls which covers the fitting wrist bands, also of pearls. Pearl cuffs, quite large and most effective, are the rule on a plain black sleeve as well.

The rustle of spring this year is caused by all the taffeta that is being worn. A delightful afternoon dress is of dark blue taffeta with a flutied jacket bossing a wide collar, and a full skirt with a deep flutied matching taffeta. The frock has a high neckline which is gathered and held by four narrow self velvet ribbons that tie in back.

A new allinance in this season's color scheme is that of black with bright yellow. A new suit has a short black woolen, cross-barred jacket with a plain black coat trimmed with the black and yellow fabric for the cuffs and large pocket flaps. It's worn with a yellow blouse.

Feelings Of Child For Adult

By LISA GRENELLE

Every time relatives came to Sunday dinner they made a great fuss over the younger children, hugging, kissing and cooing. On Sundays they laid a few packs and pats, but Sunday was the time for some children's parties, any more than it was to cry. All one day in seven.

Later Results

This type of thing, in my opinion, is largely responsible for cold lovers, undemonstrative husbands, unmanageable children, repressed, repressed, neurotic young men who have to fight their way to success in all manner of unpleasant, unnatural and unsatisfactory ways.

I don't understand children being subjected to promiscuous kissing, hugging and mauling by fussy friends and stray relatives at all ages. But if they only must take place, there certainly should be no discrimination, unless that discrimination be in favor of the child himself. If you must kiss, kiss them all.

If the maturing boy has been brought up sensibly he will not have become accustomed to a great deal of hugging and kissing. But he will have been shown some other form of affection which is the best kind of love. He will also have been encouraged to develop his affection for the tenderness freely in any way which occurs to him.

Tactful Emotional Control

A child can be hardened. He must be taught emotional control. He must be taught not to cry when he is hurt, not to show his fear, not to control his temper. By the habit of controlling these emotions he will gradually feel them less and less often.

Love, of course, is not a destructive emotion. It is the most constructive. It is the only emotion of which man is capable. Therefore, if you prevent your boy from demonstrating his love he will cease to feel it. And if he does, he is doomed, for love is the creative force and his power of goodness is gone.

Transition From His Dreamland is Hard, Authority Decreases

By LISA GRENELLE

In the beginning, every child lives in a land of miracles. Nothing is commonplace, nothing is impossible. No wish is so extravagant that it might not come true and no object so inanimate that it may not have life.

Beautiful and enchanting is the fairyland an imaginative child creates. It is entirely satisfying, never dull or hopeless. There is no death in it, no inevitable failure, monotony, disfurnishment or dreary tasks.

And he must leave this place for what? The dry routine of school, the tame and unappealing life?

Imagination is a gift, also a curse, and the same applies to sensitivity. It is pretty much up to the educating parents whether these qualities of his child turn him into an intellectual failure, a neurotic, seeking only an escape from reality, or a man whose life is made rich and successful through the power of his imagination.

Normal for Child

The transition from the world of make-believe to the world of reality is a difficult one for some children. Less sensitive little extroverted than their more sensitive brothers, find a ready outlet in friendship, competition, leadership and the stimulus of daily experience.

Some childhood it is normal and healthy for a child to live in a world of his own. But as years go on he must emerge little by little into the real world, adapting himself to it, reconciling himself to it. Otherwise he ceases to develop.

A child cannot mature unless he has faced reality squarely. He cannot mature while his dream world remains dominant. He cannot hope to lead a happy, successful, normal adult life living continually in a world divorced from reality.

But an imaginative, sensitive child may be reconciled to reality, and so well that he may become a richer, broader future than the child whose feet seem to be taken with him during the transition period.

Urge Creative Work

Urge this sensitive child toward some creative activity, some outlet.

Off-hand painting is perhaps the best angle to try first.

Encourage him to be observant from the beginning. Pull him out of his dream world at times to unleash a sunset which reality has to offer him.

Don't repress his imagination, show him how to use it in interpreting real life around him. Teach him to use it in order to understand people, their motives and living dreams.

Gradually substitute fairy tales for myths, myths for history tales, and finally stories of the miracles of discovery. And remember his is your selection; choose nothing dry for him or he will become disgusted.

YOUNG DIPLOMAT ORDERED TO BED

Capt. Anthony Eden Suffers From Heart Ailment From Overwork

London, April 8 (CP)—Orders of two physicians threw an obstacle today in the path of Great Britain's search for a formula to remove all threats to Europe's peace.

Capt. Anthony Eden, Great Britain's young diplomat, was on the placed much reliance in working out the peripheral security problem, was sent to bed and instructed to remain there to recuperate from a heart attack.

Eden's indisposition will prevent him from making a personal report on his Europeal trip at today's Cabinet session. It likewise will eliminate him from the list of Great Britain's "representatives at the tri-power conference at Stresa, beginning next Thursday and the important sessions of the League of Nations' Council next week.

Five days since his return from his fortnight's tour of five continental countries from Paris to Moscow, the Lord Privy Seal's health has been anxiously watched by his colleagues in the Government.

After a conference with his private physician, Sir John Simon, and a heart specialist yesterday, however, the 37 year old Eden learned he must take a complete rest for at least a month.

Since Eden must stay at home, increasing pressure is being brought on Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald to put Sir John Simon, Foreign Secretary, on the Stresa conference.

It was pointed out if MacDonald goes to the tri-power conference, Sir John alone should be able to cope with the League Council session as the course of events at Geneva is expected to be dictated by the powers' conversations at Stresa.

TRAIN TURNED OVER

Merida, Yucatan, Mexico, April 8 (AP)—Three persons were killed, a score injured, 200 passengers unmoved and all electric and telephone wires were destroyed, when a sudden high wind struck this city Sunday. A passenger train enroute here was turned over by the force of the gale.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Straight From the Heart"
Baby Jane Captivating in Lovable Film

Occasionally, along comes a picture of such outstanding merit that a critic wants to toss all inhibitions to the four winds and shout its merits from the housetops. Such a movie is "Straight from the Heart," romantic drama featuring Mary Astor, Roger Pryor, Baby Jane, Henry Hunter and Virginia Sale, playing now and showing at the Capitol theatre. As a showmanship interesting story enacted by a splendid cast, it is of especial interest because it brings Baby Jane, only three and a half years old, but, in our opinion the most important screen "find" in a long time.

The story opens with Marian Henshaw (Mary Astor) in a breadline in a large city. Friendless, jobless, penniless, she gives her place in line to a mother with a starving child when she learns there will not enough food to go around. Desperate, Marian attempts to pick the pockets of Andy Lovalie (Roger Pryor) who instead of turning her over to the police, gives her a job in the city day nursery.

Lovalie, mixed-up Mayor Maggie Haines, played by Baby Jane, becomes her especial charge at the nursery. Romance develops between Marian and MacLean.

You'll laugh, you'll cry—you'll find everything that makes for perfect entertainment in "Straight from the Heart". Miss Astor and Mr. Pryor are excellent, with the latter winning complete sympathy in a difficult role. Baby Jane is marvelous. You'll want to steal her for your very own and you'll look forward to seeing her again and again on the screen.

Comedy is plentifully supplied by Andy Devine and Guy Wilkinson. Every other member of the supporting cast which includes Miss Coombe, Robert McWade and many others, deserves the highest praise. Full credit should be given Scott R. Beal for his intelligent and forceful direction and to Doris Anderson who wrote the very human and decidedly "different" screen story.

By all means include this picture on your "must see" list. And that's "Straight from the Heart".

"GIRLS WILL BE BOYS"

This novel and unusual picture starring Dolly Haas, a new screen personality will be shown on this same programme. Others in the cast include Gertrude Michael and Desmond Knight.

AT THE BELLE

"David Copperfield"
Tremendous Hit and Boasts Star Cast

For more than a year the world has been hearing about the filming of "David Copperfield". It was waiting for it. The new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture opened at the Belle Saturday and without an instant's doubt or hesitation it can be hailed as one of the outstanding sensations of all motion picture history. It is superb entertainment.

The great charm of this picture is the fact that it has something of interest for everybody. Those who love romance will find it here in abundance. Those, who love spectacle will find it big enough to please everybody. Those who love comedy will chuckle and roar, for the humorous aspects f the original story have been emphasized.

In The Title Role

Perhaps the most important thing "David Copperfield" accomplishes, besides giving the world a new high standard of entertainment, is to bring out a new child star. He is Little Freddie Bartholomew, and appears to be eight or ten years old. Such tasteful boyishness never came to the screen before. In moments he is reminiscent of the Jackie Coogan that first came to the world with Charlie Chaplin in "The Kid", for little Freddie Bartholomew has the same indefinable quality of wistful eagerness. But he has also no child to pay over before and it is certain that you will see him again. He is a sensational "find."

Another new star is Lionel Barrymore, in the person of Frank Lawton, who plays the adult David. He brings to the role an adolescent charm that is entirely captivating. He will be remembered for "Cavalcade", but certain it is from now on his professional life will be dated from "David Copperfield". He is everything the role calls for, and more. He appears as an actor of distinction and ability.

His fine acting honors in the picture are by no means monopolized by little Freddie Bartholomew and Frank Lawton. As a matter of fact, any attempt at naming a single star in a picture of such tremendous proportions must inevitably fail, for there are no less than sixty-five stars and featured players in the major roles.

W. C. Fields Superb

W. C. Fields, for instance, is extremely funny and probably never to be. Pompous, boasting, strutting, he is the epitome of every human foible and weakness, yet brings to the role a certain note of pathos that only emphasizes the high comedy. He is tremendous.

Edna May Oliver, as Aunt Betsy Trotwood, is another character "right out of the book". As the crusty old lady whose brusque demeanor hides a heart of gold, she is superb.

Lionel Barrymore, Lewis Stone, Madge Evans, Roland Young, Maureen O'Sullivan, Basil Rathbone, Elizabeth Allan, Hugh Williams, Herbert Mundin... the list goes on only a very few.... are believable and real in their roles.

Story Rings True

The story of "David Copperfield" has been followed with fidelity by the director with the day of his birth, the picture takes David through his boyhood with his mother and the stern Mr. Murdstone, his stepfather. Then he goes to Peggotty and the Peggoty clan and little Em'ly; to London and his unhappy apprenticeship in a warehouse after his mother's death; to the Micawbers where he learns to pawn silver spoons; to Aunty Betsy's at Dover, where he has his first taste of sweetness and care; to the Wickfields, where he meets Agnes and Uriah Heep and learns to love the former and hate the latter; to London again, where he meets and falls in love with and marries the winsome Dora; and so through Dora's death, the unmasking of Uriah Heep's villainy, his imprisonment, the return of Micawber—a screamingly funny scene....to his final reunion at his home for Agnes, and the revelation of her love, for him.

VETERANS MARK VIMY RIDGE DAY

War Veteran Minister Tells of "Securities Our Faith"

One hundred and twenty-five war veterans accompanied by the Municipal Band and the Boy Scouts Pipe Band paraded from the Armouries to Holloway Street United Church for divine service Sunday morning. The parade and service were held in commemoration of the great battle of Vimy Ridge and to pay tribute with respect to their comrades who gave up their lives that the world might enjoy freedom.

The Band opened with the singing of "O Canada."— Psalm 730 was read by Rev. R. Newman, the minister, after which the congregation joined in singing "O God Our Help in Ages Past." The reading was taken from the 1st. Chapter of 1st. Timothy, 15th verse, "This saying as an anthem "Lest We Forget" with the solo part taken by Mrs. O'Neil.

Rev. R. Newman, war veteran himself, pastor of the church, delivered the sermon. He was originally from Belleville. Reverend Mr. Newman based his sermon on the theme, "Our Security because of your faith intact." Our securities are not in battle ships, in navies and guns, but in God, said he. "The world at present is in chaos. The pattern seems to be that the nations have been shaken. Relations between nations are broken and many League of Nations since its foundation, but it is strengthened with many serious situations."

"Hitler is demanding equality among nations. Hitler is a rebellious mover," said Mr. Newman. "Thus, the security of Europe is in a fever leaves us in doubt as to who won the Atlantic ocean."

The last sixteen years has seen a period of worldwide prosperity and hope, but now a period of depression. There is no scarcity in the world, but there is a glut of everything. There is strife, enmity and hatred in the world. Governments are puzzled. The systems of the world are not just. They need to be put right. Governments need to go down and new and just ones take their place.

"Where are the securities of our faith? Where we trust and love our power and love alone can save us today. Put God's power and love in your hearts," said Mr. Newman. The supreme sacrifice of the ages was that of Christ. Him is a vision of a world we have not seen today.

"Let us seek to make a worthwhile contribution to this world. That is one of the securities of our faith. That is why we went overseas," said Mr. Newman. We made a worth while contribution to Canada by committing ourselves to the great cause. The need of God is the great need. Our greatest security is in God, our hope, our faith and our joys. "In God we trust" should keep the sacredness of your faith intact."

Colonel Greville May rendered a beautiful number "Under His Wings." A hymn "Rock of Ages, Rock of God" was sung. Rev. Mr. Newman closed with the benediction.

GORDON MANAHAN IS UNDER ARREST

Charged With Theft And Remanded For One Week

Gordon Manahan, Belleville, who has been known to the local and provincial police for the past two months in connection with the Belleville Creamery robbery, was arrested by Kingston police over the week-end. He was brought back to the local police court, held before Magistrate R. J. Butler, K.C. today, charged with breaking, entering and the theft of $500.00 and other articles. The accused pleaded not guilty and was not asked to plead, but was further enlarged for one week at the request of Crown Attorney D. C. Donnelly, K.C.

James Hedger of this city and alleged by police to have been an accomplice in the robbery, during the Belleville Creamery robbery last January, pleaded guilty to the identical same charge as was read to Manahan when the former appeared before Magistrate Butler on Saturday. A sentence of three months in the Ontario Reformatory resulted.

Hedger, Manahan and a man known as "Red" are believed by police to have broken and entered the creamery on the night in question. Finding the safe door open nearly $600.00 was found. The money, authorities stated today, is thought to have been equally divided between the trio. For the past two months Manahan has evaded the police and was known to be living in hiding in Rochester, N.Y., but returned to Kingston last week-end. A warrant for Manahan's arrest was issued over two months ago. He was returned to the city yesterday in the custody of local police.

LUDENDORFF SAYS "HE'S A HEATHEN

London, April 8.—(AP)— The Munich correspondent of Reuter's reports today General Erich Ludendorff, breaking a long silence on the eve of his 70th birthday, greatly adds to himself "an anti-christian and a heathen" and placed the blame on Christianity for Germany's collapse, in 1918.

The General, in an interview in his small, richly-appointed villa in the Bavarian village of Tutzing, was quoted as saying:

"Only through the complete renunciation of Christianity will the German people achieve the unity it needs and which would have saved it from the trying days of 1918."

The Roman Catholic Church and the Protestant Confessional flyod declined to display flags tomorrow in honor of the General's 70th birthday, although Reichschurcher Hitler himself ordered all Government buildings to fly flags.

Hitler's order read:

"With feelings of deep gratitude the German people remember the imperishable achievement of its great Field Commander of the World War. Impressed by this sentiment and his national deeds of gratitude, I therefore, order all Government buildings to be flagged."

Spokesman for the Synod said they felt it would not be proper, no matter how much its members may admire Ludendorff as a warrior and a politician, for the churches to display flags.

SIMPSON WANTS EDITORS TO SIGN

Says He Will Never Stand Dictation of Press

Guelph, Apr. 8.—Mayor James Simpson of Toronto, in an address at the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation convention here, added a few more remarks to his list of criticisms of the fourth estate.

His Worship said that if he were ever in a position of being about legislation on measures in Canada he would pass a law requiring all editors to sign their names to their editorials.

Mayor Simpson added that if some of these men who write editorials, discrediting men in public office were as well known as some of the subjects of their attacks their opinions would not be accepted as "worth two cents".

"The paper nevvy has been put ever will be that will tell me what to say," he announced.

Mayor Simpson made a passing reference to the Hydro situation, without offering any opinion on the merits of either side in the Quebec power-contracts controversy. He said, however, that it was the duty of the government, at all costs, to exercise such powers as it might have to prevent the Ontario Hydro Electric System going into the hands of private capital.

Guardians of the Desert

By TOM GILL

The girl was silent, and the older woman, watching her, could not be sure what effect her words were having, for Nora inhaled the cigarette slowly and continued to tap the smoking knife with her slender finger.

Yet beneath that passive attitude her nerves were racing back to a cave-like place high up among granite boulders, and at the thought that within another day a circle of men would be slowly closing in upon it like beaters driving prey for the rifles of hunters, she threw her cigarette abruptly into the fireplace and walked the length of the long room.

Suddenly Nora turned. "Why do you tell me this?"

At the intensity of her voice the woman flinched as against some physical assault. Affrighted, she gasped, "I wanted to help you," then clasped both hands over her breast as if to still the beating of her breast. "I had to tell you—you must never say a word to Pat—so that if there is any way of reaching Dick Jewell your brother might persuade him to leave the country."

She eyes dropped before Nora's steady gaze, and for a long moment the room was silent except for the crackling of cinquilla in the fireplace.

Again Mrs. O'Hearn's voice was speaking, "Don't be angry, Nora. Pat doing this only to save your heartaches for all of us. I want Pat to be happy, and knowing how much you mean to him, I thought if you could only talk to Dick he would persuade him to leave the country. Then everything might happen that would break this—friendship between you and you."

So naïvely, so sincerely she spoke that Nora felt a responsive wave of sympathy toward this woman whose life was so miserably centred in the welfare of her soldier son.

Bending down, the girl took her hand. "I'm not angry. Let's hope that everything comes out all right." Then she added, with half a sigh, "I'll not be able to ride with him tomorrow."

"But, dear, he'll feel quite deserted. You haven't ridden with him for days now."

Nora nodded. "I know. But it will have to be later", She smiled a little mirthlessly. "Besides, I've has more important things to do than ride with Pat."

Sighing, the woman rose. "It's all a very troubled business, isn't it? If only everyone could be law-abiding and peaceful."

"But then there would be no need for soldiers and border guards, and Pat would have lost a vocation."

A moment later Mrs. O'Hearn entered the Army car and was driven away.

Filled with foreboding, Nora returned to the empty house and again all the formless terror of the unknown crowded in upon her as the danger that threatened the Dick back there among the hills. Something had to be done, something quickly. But what? She raised both arms in a gesture of impotent rebellion.

"How helpless we all are. How utterly helpless!"

Lighting a cigarette, she paced the long room, trying to recall the newspaper office only to learn that her brother was not there. She looked at the clock. It was too late he would be home, and fired with a sudden resolve, Nora got up the telephone.

"I want to speak to Solon Lowell, in Washington," she told the operator.

Ten minutes passed, fifteen, then the sound of a voice brought back the tension, and throwing her cigarette into the fireplace, Nora lifted the receiver.

For a moment the line buzzed and clicked, then a woman's voice came deferingly, then clear and distinct, over the wire.

"What's up, Nora girl?" There was just the slightest tremor in that voice, a tremor that brought a startled ray of hope, for it betrayed to her that within Solon Lowell's heart lay a fear for the welfare of his son.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SEVEN

"Did you get my letter about Dick?" she asked.

"Surely. Also letters from Price, Radcliffe, and nearly every Verde rancher." Over her heard the subdued rumble of his laugh. "Some of them call me hard names, Nora. Well, I'm used to that. As for Dick, it's my fault from beginning to end."

"It's not 'his fault," she blazed back at him. "His only fault lies in being poor and in being in debt. Just as you would act—trying to fight all the ring single handed."

She stopped until her gust of anger passed. "Uncle Solon, I'm not calling to argue that all over again. I'm calling to ask you to please intervene by tomorrow and have the charges dropped out. Dick has been killed. They know where he is, they're laying plans to surround him. Last night there was shooting. The was weeping now. "Your own son, alone in the hills, hunted like a wild beast and shot down like a criminal."

A long moment followed, heard only the low humming of the wire, then at last the slow words. "I'll do what I can, Nora."

"You can't think— there isn't time. You've got to do something!" ny the sobbing voice answered. "Listen. Uncle Solon, Dick has a child out here, a boy He's your own flesh and blood, no less than Dick. What kind of a man has been most selfish tory for the strong man of the Southwest, and at its conclusion he called six picked men to his office at Azure Lake. They were all men with whom he had fought side by side, men whose pasts fitted them admirably to his purposes—men he could trust, however desperate the enterprise. As they stood before him his eyes passed slowly over the hardened features of each and he smiled in satisfaction at his choice.

"I have picked you boys from all over the West," he said slowly, "to put over the biggest job I've ever given anyone to do—and that's saying plenty. I've picked you boys because you've lived here and know these mountains like the backs of your hands. Somewhere along the rim of this city breed can do what I want done. I'm not telling you what it is, there's any hitch or if you get dumb at the wrong time, you'll be out. Understand? Now, here are your pictures,

Some time tomorrow—probably around sunrise—a man or woman will ride down the trail from Lowell. I think it'll be a woman. Which way that rider goes I'm not sure, but I think it will be over the hills. Just to play all hunches, I want you, Lefty, to ride down into the mesquite on the Mexican side of the line. Juan can ride the top of the barrier to guard against any one across it. The other four of you I want scattered just far enough into the forest a couple of miles apart, where you'll be able to see anyone riding up that way. Keep well back and stay back, because that bird is not the one we're after, but Dick Lowell. As soon as the rider reaches the forest, ride out from under and get the edge of the hills and signal by waving your pocket. Then I'll be on lookout with field glasses, and I'll have twenty men ready to jump into the saddle and ride. Hell be for leather. The rest of you follow that rider. He is going to take you to Dick Lowell, and if you get a chance—you know what I mean—don't hesitate to take him alive. He's worth more dead, and he's a bad man to fight in the open. But no pot shooting—no long distance! I want him to be sure—dead sure."

The man's hand grasped the table before him and his eyes burned with the intensity of his thoughts. Again he looked searchingly at each one, to make sure that they were following every word.

"We've got no time to lose," the voice went on. "Soon that survey crew may bring in its findings, and after that our hands will be filled with other things. We've got to get Lowell and get him quick. If there's a running fight, push him hard and keep close. And if you can hole him up anywhere, lay low and wait. We'll be able to follow your tracks easily enough, but it you hear a shot, answer it. You know what the reward is if you get Lowell. Then once again his stalwart eyes fixed them in a kindled mesmerism. "And, you'll find out what happens to the rider if you mess of this."

He looked at his watch. "You've got three hours to rest," pack up, and start I want each man at his post by midnight. Good luck." Which every arroyo, every trail. And keep back in the timber. It only takes one blunder to spoil it all."

Cheerfully a half breed among them picked up. "This Senor Lowell he is one sure shot. If we corner him up in that mountain, do we fight Gringo soldiers help?"

"Don't be damned." Saris face was livid. "This is our show, sabe? If you corner him hold him, but don't do for me. There'll be ever tawnily of us. Do you think twenty men will be enough to take care of that sure shot?"

"But I only ask, Senor Sarl," the man mumbled.

"Get to hell out of here and do as I tell you." The cords in Saris's neck swelled, and for a moment the desire seized him to strike the man with his clenched fist, but instead he stood there, motionless, while slowly his passion subsided. At last, without a word, he pointed to the door, and one by one they shuffled quickly out.

Then he and their footsteps had died away and absolute silence gathered about the bunkhouse, Sarl sat there, his eyes gazing steadily before him. Somewhere a clock struck midnight. Beyond the grey-green crags above to cerise glory that slowly faded.

Sharply its sloping rays etched the slender figure of a rider toiling up a dry arroyo toward the pine forests, and from the fridge of pine trees a pair of glasses were peering out, eyes that later widened with surprise to find the rider was a girl. To the east, hidden in a cleft of pinon, another watcher caught up the climbing figure, and crawling on hands and knees further back into the forest, the grey-clad crags above to cerise glory that slowly faded.

Steadily Nora climbed that steep ascent, urging her horse to even a faster pace, relieved to see that he him even a breathing spell until the more slender outline of the timber had been reached. Once only she stopped, and then to scan the surrounding country and raise her eyes toward the curtain of pines above. Dick was somewhere up there, a vague moment some inner sense warned her of those watching eyes, and she reined her head hastily, realising that danger threatened, Nora hurried on.

Even before she joined him Dick had turned his horse, and together they doubled back into the hills, while he told her f the pursuing force that may already have reached the lower stretches of pine.

"We'll keep ahead of them," he ended, "and rt the divide you must take that old sheep trail down the other side and back to Verde, and don't come again, Nora—neither you nor Wolf nor Sloth. None of you. It's getting too dangerous. God alone knows how much it means to see you first for a little while, but I can't let you do it. It will be safer for me to come down in the night to your ranch whenever need arises."

She looked at him and a dull pain gripped her heart. Those past days of unceasing vigilance were beginning to leave their tell-tale trace and the man's face was tired and worn. But his eyes held the same unconquerable fire and the hand that never moved far from his holster was firm as before. Saddened she watched him, her starved love leaping and eager with a throb of pity the stubble of beard that had grown since the night he became an outcast. Reluctantly the thought forced its way upon her that even with all his spirit and despite his indomitable will the odds against him were too heavy to very long endure.

CHAPTER THIRTY-EIGHT

Hurriedly Nora told him of the plan to surround him next day, and he listened intently, but presently shook his head.

"It doesn't ring true," he said at last. "Not a single track has come near the cave-mouth. I'm on the watch."

Soon they crossed a flat, stony stream bed that in a few months would be a turbulent, rushing torrent, but now held only a thin, icy trickle winding over a floor of water-worn rocks. Here no trees were, and they passed quickly on, their horses' hoofs clicking sharply against the smooth stones.

Leaving the trail, Dick headed toward the timber's edge where he might learn how close Sarl's followers had approached before he led Nora across the divide to the back trail. Here they both halted.

Below them the pursuing party crept still. One band had almost reached the forest at the same point where Dick had entered. The others still skirted the foothills far to the left.

Dick nodded. "They're trying to get you between them." His eyes were sombre. "This means you'd better not come again, Nora. For if anything should—"

But those words were never finished. With a snort of fright his horse jerked back just as the spiteful crack of a rifle ripped its way through the timber, and Nora's bay sprinting to the ground. Terror stricken, the bay reared, plunging madly, knocking the rifle from its scabbard, and for a moment Lowell feared the horse had been hit. In a flash his automatic was out, and he turned to fire three answering riders, on the farther edge of the rocky stream. As he wheeled another rifle crashed, and a sudden stinging pain in Dick's shoulder made him swerve in the saddle.

Yet even in that moment of blinding pain his first thought was of safety for the girl, and reaching down, he struck her horse with his open hand. Wildly the pony leaped forward into a clump of aspen, and

DOCTOR SAID SHE NEEDED "BULK" FOR HER CONSTIPATION"

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN Brings Relief to Mrs. Maneely

Read the following unsolicited letter:

"Up to five years ago, I knew no end of suffering caused by constipation," it started with dull headaches but only found relief till I got used to them. By that time I was told me to get some Kellogg's ALL-BRAN, and instructed me how to use it.

"I did just as I was told by my doctor, and today I send my highest praise for what your cereal has done for me."—Mrs. Jas. Maneely, Jr. Address upon request.

"Due to insufficient "bulk" in meals.

ALL-BRAN provides gentle "bulk" to help overcome common constipation. It is also a good source of vitamin B and iron.

The "bulk" of ALL-BRAN is often more effective than the bulk of fruits and vegetables, as it does not break down within the body. Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. If not corrected this way, see your doctor.

Isn't this food much pleasanter to eat rather than risking patent medicine? Get the red-and-green package at your grocer's. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

Maroons Practically Cinch Stanley Cup Defeating Leafs Second Straight Time by 3-1

Teams Play in Montreal Tuesday And Series Can End

CONNELL SMART

Fore Checking Used by Gorman Slow Leafs To a Walk

(By Elmer Dulmage, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Toronto, April 8 (CP)—The excitement of a Stanley Cup hockey series was transferred today to Montreal where, under the circumstances, it may reach a climax of mingled joy as early as Tuesday night should Montreal's own Maroons find the range enough and power to humble the National Hockey League champions, Toronto Maple Leafs, that quickly.

Maroons departed from a scene of desolation with two victories over the Leafs, needing only one more to finish it, speedwise a playoff series as any in years. They could end it all tomorrow night or Thursday night, each time before a Montreal crowd. Should they fail, a fifth game would be played here.

As confident and free as though they were having the better of all exchanges—which they weren't—Tommy Gorman's red raiders accomplished three bits of accurate sniping here Saturday night and stunned a crowd of 14,147 by defeating the Leafs 3-1. They won the title in four in overtime.

It was a stunning performance because the Leafs, unmistakably aroused to the importance of the occasion, pressed the Montreal forces back in their own end of the rink in the first period and kept them there with few lapses until late in the second. The Gormanites, were swamped everywhere but in goal.

Still Maroons Lead

When these pro-Toronto periods were over, the records showed that the Maroons to be leading 2-1. Eric Robinson, brilliant right winger, had picked a loose hockey-clouted puck late in the first period while King Clancey was serving a penalty and whisked it past George Hainsworth. At Maroons near-chaos had come a Maroon goal.

Late in the second period when the Toronto team had had the best of its sting, Russ Blinco had gathered in a forward pass from Aurel Shields at mid-ice and roared around Happy Day for the second tally. The busy blonde centre pleased hugely before the veteran Hap could make a play.

Outside of these two flashing plays Maroons were virtually nowhere. Alex Connell, rising to new heights for him, had to snatched a half-dozen goals off the sticks of the relentless Leafs, kicked out a dozen others, batted away more with his stick.

"One-a-Minute" Connell, they called him after the first hectic period. The Ottawa fireman made 31 stops in the first 20 minutes. Some he probably never saw. At his threw himself across the front of the cage they struck him. Fully a dozen other Leaf shots he blocked with pads by inches.

Maroons fought desperately to prevent the downfall of the veteran and, if they didn't help enough to make Connell's job easy, they at least eased his plight. Attacking Leafs were handcuffed by checkers from behind and on both sides. Maroons gave them few openings for unmolested shots.

But a few minutes in the second period the score was tied. Harvey Jackson, with Blinco an outstanding star of the rolling Maple attack, had from end to end to blaze a close-range shot into the net. The Leafs were shorthanded when the Bushy Jesse went through the whole Montreal team.

Leafs Willted

Two stanzas of ceaseless rushing, steady driving, took a certain toll from the rugged Leafs, and the Maroons found an effective checking method in the third period. Forwards went into their territory and met the puck-carrier early. They disrupted what system Leafs organize at the source.

This was Gorman forechecking at its best. Hooley Smith, Baldy Northcott, Jimmy Ward, Bob Gracie, Gus Marker and Herbie Cain played the leading roles. They couldn't prevent the Leafs from bombarding Connell with nine shots—four or five of them dangerous—but they managed to make the champions look extremely impotent most of the period.

When Northcott broke away with Marvin Wentworth and swept over on Hainsworth with a neat pass it was all over. That third goal spoiled the Toronto guns as effectively as forechecking had done. The Leafs kept pitching them in to Connell but without effect.

Only the most optimistic Toronto fans look at the two rays of light, that thread of gloom left by the Maroons. One is that the red machine hasn't won a playoff game this season on Montreal ice. They were held to a scoreless tie by the Chicago Black Hawks and managed to get a 3-3 tie with the New York Rangers.

The other is that the Leafs lost the first two games of the N.H.L. finals to Detroit Red Wings here last spring, then went into Detroit and squared the series, losing the fifth game on Detroit ice. If they can repeat that comeback, beating Maroons twice, they will have earned the fifth game back in Toronto.

SUDBURY WILL MEET MONARCHS

Winnipeg Team Earns Right by Defeating Saskatoon

Winnipeg, April 8—(CP)—Winnipeg Monarchs, junior hockey champions of Western Canada by right of conquest, were in the Memorial Cup finals today. Conquerors of Saskatoon Wesleys in a hectic battle which ended late tomorrow night. The second game will be played Thursday.

Monarch annexed the western title and possession of the Abbott Cup by defeating Wesleys 3-2 in the final game of their championship series here Saturday night. The Manitoba-Thunder Bay titlists took the first game 5-4 and Wesleys took the series by shading to a 3-2 victory in the second encounter.

A crowd of 4,000 excited fans crowded the amphitheatre for the final game, that wrote "finis" to the championship year of clubs. One of the most brilliant junior squads to play here in many years. For two periods they matched speed with the blackthorn and enjoyed a marvelous play.

Mel Nellsen's goal shortly after the third period opened lead the count at 2-2 but Pete Belanger's whistling drive from just within the Saskatoon blue line proved the winning stroke. Paul Gauthier, Monarch net man, did not give a desperate Wesleys until the final whistle sounded.

Daily Short Story

"Mailing List"

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Pretty Peggy Waters whose twinkling toes and svelte figure graced the No. 1 chorus line of the 1935 Brevities, had just consented to marry Dick Stone as soon as Dick won a promotion at the bank.

Peggy's practical turn of mind didn't help Dick's outlook for the future. That young man realized she wouldn't be satisfied to live on $60 a week the David National Bank paid him to be one of its tellers. And, as for that promotion—well, in a bank, they have to die or retire before there's advancement, Dick reflected, ruefully.

No, he had to have money plenty of it, and mighty soon, if he hoped to lead Peggy to the altar. Any modern young lady with startling blonde hair and a personality as engaging as Peggy's wasn't likely to wait around in this year 1935 for a young man to make good when the ready-made articles with the $ sign attached were on hand.

Of course, an honest man would never have gotten around to thinking of such a scheme as Dick did. Here's what he told himself time after time before he took the plunge. Here's how he went about it.

Two Words

Every afternoon about 4:30, he and the other bank employees were assigned to counting off the cash taken in that particular day at the bank. Though the bank he worked in was a branch office, the daily cash receipts were usually in excess of $ 20,000. Each teller worked by himself in the tabulation of the moneys; each one made his slip out and reported it to the assistant cashier.

What was here to prevent him from "accidentally" skimming maybe a fifty day by day until he had accumulated a tidy sum?

He could do it. The intricate juggling of the figures and by playing dumb, if suspicious accusations wouldn't be noticed for some time, and meanwhile—

Meanwhile, he reasoned, he would put the money back. Day by day he argued himself into believing that he was merely borrowing the money that he would be able to put it to use and watch the growth. Then when he had a sizeable wad of it his own—

He took his first chance on May 3rd. Exactly one month later, he had $600 in five, ten, twenty, and fifty-dollar bills tucked away in a hiding place in his apartment-room.

He never touched it. No sprurging on a sudden splurging of new clothes or flashy display of new-found wealth. No one was going to catch him.

By June 10th, he had "borrowed" $950. Not a finger of suspicion had been pointed at him or his colleagues. His knowledge of figures helped him enormously. And now to put the money to work, and return what he had "lifted."

Late that afternoon he entered his apartment to find a letter, addressed in a foreign hand, waiting for him. That's funny . . . he tore the envelope and his face blanched as he read the two words printed in a bold hand on white paper:

"Watch Out!"

Two Words

That was all. Two words. But those two words generated fear in Dick's mind. For three days and nights he lived in a daze. His mind couldn't function, his conversation was meaningless. His work was dismissed the letter as the work of a crank had not a second letter reached him the same week bearing this significant message:

"This is your second warning. Be careful what you do. Our next letter will reveal everything."

No signature, no clue so to author of the notes Dick wiped perspiration from his face. Next there was nothing to do. The jig was up. He was known. Well what could he do? Confess? No. That would be the finish. He could leave town, beat it. But then Peggy . . . sweet, lovable, waiting for that promotion . . . and cash.

Near collapse, he dragged himself to work the next day, and mechanically, accurately, he got his books out, and returned every penny of the money. Well, maybe he was caught, finished, but he'd face it with the knowledge that he had put the money back. His record otherwise, was good. They'd give him an other chance perhaps . . .

By the time he's reached home, he felt better, safer; there was a healthy lift to his shoulders. He swung up the stairs—and the first thing he saw was a letter in the same handwriting. He shut his eyes for a moment, opened them, opened them and tore the letter out of its envelope. It read:

"We warned you, didn't we? Take Medicated Salts Daily for That Sluggish Feeling. It will Make a new Man Of You!"

Dick collapsed. He did more than that—he took sick leave for a week. And when he went back to the bank and they welcomed his return as warmly as ever, that young man had made a promise from Peggy that she'd changed her mind, and was willing to gamble her future happiness on a $40-a-week salary.

Little Benny's Note Book

We was saling supper and ma said to pop, This isn't the end of the middle ages, and it's not the ignorant time of witchcraft, either.

How true, pop said, it's a pritty bad time, though, at that, he said, and he said, what I mean is, I don't mean it's redickulous to the verge of absurdity to imagine that one person has the power to put a curse on another in this age of science.

It seems too bad, too, pop said. I can think of several undeserving scoundrels I'd delight to put a little curse on, he said, and ma said, You can imagine my utter amazement when a tattered old beggar woman actually presented a curse on me this afternoon simply because I didn't happen to have any change to give her. She must of mistaken me for a person who would be very easily frightened, the ideer, isn't that comical! ma said.

What kind of a curse did she wish on you, was it a good rich one? pop said, and ma said, Why she actually said, she said, May you know misery and want, and may your health fale, and may the health of your children and your grandchildren? I mean the idea of her gesting all hers grandchildern when nobody even knowes I'm a genuine grandchee and that I actually tell them to their serpries. I didn't even know she knew I was, it just said, O go away with such nonsense. Now you dont deserve anything even if you did believe, but just to return good for evil and no questions asked. I'll give you 10 cents if you take back your silly words because I wouldn't want you to have them on your conscience meaningless as they are, I said to her. So, she promptly blessed me and wished me a long and happy life including all my grandchildern who she still insisted I had for sone reason. That just shows how ignorant and superstitious these people are, ma said.

Pop not saying anything on account of being behind the sporting page.

Inevitable European War Will Not Come Soon, Expert Finds; Sees "Scare" Aroused by Hitler Prolonging Peace of World

By CAPT. JOHN CRAIGIE

Author of "Black Bagdad" and "Clouded Crusbar," famous soldier of fortune and military observer, formerly U.S.M.C.

(Copyright by Central Press Canadian)

Washington, April 6—Europe will NOT go to war soon.

To the military analyst, it appears that Herr Hitler's brusque announcement of Germany's rearming and the conferences and developments which have followed have had little effect in hastening the next European war.

There have been, of course tremendous repercussions among statesmen and citizens in European countries. Diplomats have rushed here and there and poured out speeches and communiques. But as days succeed each other without definite action, the conviction grows more strongly in the mind of the experienced observer that these expressions are to be properly considered as gestures designed to produce political effect and go influence the sentiment of the world. Otherwise they are sound and fury, signifying nothing.

Actually the effect of Germany's announcement is more likely to prolong peace than bring war sooner. The open declaration of new hostilities of friction from the face of the realities of the European situation. It will be most difficult henceforth for the statement in the countries which confront Germany to deceive themselves and their people. There can be no further question of representing Germany as a pretends and defenceless country which must obey without question the orders of better-armed states. Now she stands revealed as an armed nation in the midst of a continent of arms. Now the European statesmen will think twice about taking steps designed to coerce Germany. All of them realize that the outcome of war in these days is not the victory or defeat but also probably extinction.

This realization is a clear gain for peace. Obviously it will be more difficult for statesmen to "sell" other European nations a war with Germany. Yet the basic facts of the situation, though slightly modified, are unchanged. These facts point unerringly towards war. How soon or how late, under what circumstances or in what combinations, no man can predict. But war, inevitably.

The military analyst is accustomed to discount the pronouncements of chancelleries. He knows full well the truth of Talleyrand's maxim, "Language was created to enable diplomats to conceal their thoughts." He is undergraduate the workings of the great national propaganda mills which grind day and night to bedeaf lamas. The average man is overwhelmed in a mass of conflicting statements. He is much like a customer in an old-fashioned fishmarket, trying to think while surrounded by a hubbub of shouting and importuning fishwomen.

Victors Took All

The Germans have always contended that their armies surrendered on the basis of President Wilson's famous Fourteen Points, with prescribed "Peace without victory". At the treaty-table in Versailles the Germans were stripped of arms, annexed to sterling war-indemnity and deprived of territories which had been German since the days of Charlemagne. Colonies, overseas trade, means of existence were taken away from them. The standard of German living was cut to bare existence. Bread became a luxury on the German table. They were forced to admit in writing that they alone had been guilty of starting the world war, an obvious mistruth. Humiliation, starvation, beggary.

The military man's province does not include moral criticism. He is concerned only in deducting future consequences from past events. The actions of the Allies at the treaty-table in Versailles paved for him to have rendered future war inevitable. Had the Allied statesmen dented lasting peace as they professed, it seems to the military man that they would have acted far differently.

Treaties Are Strong

By the Peace of 1918 Germany was deprived of the means of a decent physical existence. She was deprived of psychic and moral consideration which the race, more often prize even more than physical necessities. The military scientist sees all this as war. All animals will fight for their lives. Men will fight for ideas. Nations, the highly civilized, thinking people do not like to fight. They know the cost and the unpleasantness of war. They count on cost. But if their position is intolerable enough, if expanding population, conquest or other forces drive them to beggary, there comes a time when they will face the costs of war rather than submit. That is, if they are a virile, aggressive race.

The Teutonic race is a powerful one, the modern race-root, in fact, of all the dominant nations of Europe. The Franks were Germans before they became English. The Angles and Saxons were Germans before they became English. The peoples east of the Rhine and Alps in Tyrolia, in northern Italy, in Switzerland and in Austria are Germans. Even the Scandinavians are not Chinese, nor are they subordinate Hindoos. It just was not in the books that the powerful German race would submit to the treatment dealt out to them at Versailles.

Position Intolerable

History since then has been the history of German striving by diplomatic and political means to acquire the force necessary to compel a revision of the treaty provisions. At times there were apparent submissions to the will of the Allies. Some of the German statesmen, notably Stresemann, endeavored to make it appear that the Germans liked their former foes were satisfactorily GAZ TWO ..... ba fied with the Treaty and considered the German fate a just one. But they fooled few intelligent observers. These knew that the German race from top to bottom considered its position intolerable, planned to force revision of the 1918 Treaty and would not submit to its terms a single day, war or no war, after they had acquired the force to resist application.

Hitler's rise to power was founded upon his promise to defy the former Allies, repudiate the Treaty of Versailles and restore Germans their former excellent standard of living and regain lost provinces.

War is Inevitable

The lost provinces now are in the hands of non-German nations which will fight rather than give them up. Hitler makes no secret of the fact that he will fight to get them back. To restore Germany's former standards of living, she must have trade, probably colonies. Other nations have Germany's trade and her colonies. These will fight to retain what they have.

There is no answer to all this except war. Its roots are in the physical insufficiency of Europe to house the populous and vigorous races by which it is inhabited. No nation is to blame for its struggles to improve its lot. But for one to have enough, others must do without. And no European nation will do without what it thinks it needs, without fighting, if fighting is necessary.

So fight they will, soon or late.

U. S. GUN FACTORIES RUNNING AT FULL BLAST

The scene is the Washington navy yard gun shops where some of the U. S. navy's ordinance is manufactured and an expert is shown examining the bore of a big gun, to determine if it is true to specifications. The gun shops in Washington was carried unanimously to be wired to Prime Minister R. B. Bennett and Opposition Leader W. L. Mackenzie King at Ottawa:

"We, the several hundred investors in Nanaimo and Alberton county, view with greatest alarm the proposed action by the Ontario Government in repudiating existing contracts with the Quebec power companies. If repudiation is carried out, the losses to our citizens will be greater than the losses sustained by depositors in all Canadian banks that have failed since confederation. We plead with you to use your influence to prevent the disaster."

The following second resolution was also unanimous:

"This meeting of security owners hereby protests all the security holders of Quebec power bonds in all the constituencies of Ontario to immediately get in touch with all Federal candidates for the forthcoming Federal election and endeavor to have their Federal candidate express to the Ontario cabinet the very great loss that thousands of innocent and deserving citizens of Ontario will suffer if the Ontario Hydro Power Commission repudiates its contracts with the various Quebec power companies."

Authentic figures show that the holdings in Nanaimo and district of Quebec power bonds are near the $100,000 mark and of this amount $105,000 is in second mortgage issues and the latter in the event of a reorganization would probably be worthless.

Mr. Weldon, in referring to the $180,000,000 of these bonds that were issued, said they were principally subscribed for by common people and such institutions as colleges, hospitals and life insurance companies, the latter being by far the largest single owners. He later remarked on the "retiring manner" in which the insurance companies have taken the situation.

The Liberal member of the riding, Mr. Bowerman, charged that the cost of power should be just half and asked why the power from the Ottawa River should be $6.86 on the Quebec side and $15 on the Ontario side. "Why aren't the books of the Hydro laid open for your inspection?" he asked.

A committee appointed to act in the interests of the Nanaimo and district bondholders is as follows: R. S. Wales, Wesley Young, J. G. Hall, James Moffat, G. F. Smith and W. J. Pinlay.

O.M.E.A. WANTS HYDRO MEMBER

Letter Sent Out Asking Representation on The Board

Guelph, April 6—Appealing to Government members and municipalities for representation on the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, the Ontario Municipal Electric Association, through its secretary, T. J. Hannigan, of Guelph forwarded a letter to all interested persons urging their co-operation in this matter.

The letter points out that the new power bill states that contracts should never have been entered into without the consent of the municipalities, but makes no provision for such consent being obtained in the event of future contracts The letter states:

"We feel that the proposed Hydro Electric Power Commission Act of 1936 should be amended to provide that no contracts for supplies of power be entered into, or power developments undertaken without the consent of the Hydro municipalities.

"And we feel that the rights of the municipalities would be better protected, and we would be in a better position to secure information from time to time respecting the conduct of Hydro affairs through having a representative of the municipalities as a member of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario."

With the letter are enclosed two resolutions, which were carried at a recent meeting of the executive of the O.M.E.A., asking that representation be granted and reaffirming previous requests of the same nature.

HOME AND SCHOOL HEARS ADDRESS ON HOME IDEALS

Speaker Advocates Return of Old Fashioned Home Ways

Picton—Rev. S. M. Scott was the very interesting speaker at the April meeting of the Home and School Club on Thursday afternoon. His address was unusual in that instead of advocating the organization of clubs regarding the upbringing of children, he made a plea for the return to the old ideals of homes of a generation ago."

The one criticism, said the kindergarten and the speaker, was that they took the child away for part of the day, at the request of mother, at an age when the child should remain in the home of the home and mother at this period of formative impulses.

Parents to-day seem too ready to place too large a share of their responsibility to the child, on the day school teachers and Sunday school leaders. Scott did not think anything would be gained by giving the children of the schools religious instruction each week by different ministers. Only by the daily teaching of moral precepts by the teacher and the parents would the child gain a great deal of religion. The old fashioned mother welcomed the child home after school. The modern mother was too often absent at club meetings when the children came home. Parents nowadays do not seem in many cases to take an interest in the child's homework and direct his reading and recreation. The speaker pleaded for greater co-operation between mothers and teachers. Children will go further when their parents are spiritual the child will go farther. If they are indifferent, the child will be more indifferent. Children must be carefully trained in the home to preserve our civilization which is in jeopardy today. In Italy little children play guns, older children use larger guns, and so on until finally has an army ready to fight the world—an illustration of how wrong training of children affects the world.

Miss Dunkley moved a hearty vote of thanks to the speaker for the timely warning which was seconded by Mrs. Allen.

It was decided to send Miss Dunkley as a delegate to attend the annual convention in Toronto during Easter week. It was also suggested that the delegate's expenses be paid by the Club.

The next meeting will be as favoring Daylight Saving in Picton on the first Thursday in October in 1935.

Princess Mary in V. A. D. Uniform in 1918

ONE very important member of the royal family seems to have been neglected in our daily stories. She is Princess Mary, now Viscountess Lascelles.

The Princess is the only daughter of the King and Queen. Born in 1897, she was called by Queen Victoria "My dear little Diamond Jubilee Baby."

When war broke out, Princess Mary was just seventeen, her "coming out" parties were forgotten in the years of strife, and the charming Princess turned her attention, as did all the other members of the royal family to war work. She became an active organizer; she made and collected garments for the soldiers; she was a constant visitor to hospitals and canteens; she inspired the women of England to the great heights to which they rose in the war years.

And all who came in contact with her, loved her. Ever cheerful and witty, the Prince of Wales once said of her: "I wish she were her sister." Her sympathy and understanding of the problems of the men and women who had been in the war, and of the children who had been left fatherless, made her a favorite with all classes.

Princess Mary was brought up under the influence not only of Queen Mary, but of Queen Alexandra, both of the old school. As a result she was well-trained in household duties as well as in the task in being a princess.

In her childhood she was somewhat of a "mother" to her brothers and used to play the part whenever the King and Queen as Prince and Princess of Wales, were away.

In 1918, the princess realized a life's ambition by becoming a "probation nurse at the Hospital for sick children in Great Ormond street, London. Our picture to-day shows her with her mother, Queen Mary, in V.A.D. uniform. She continued this work until 1920.

In February, 1922, she was married to Viscount Lascelles of Harewood, one of the wealthiest men in Britain. They now have two children, their first-born, George Henry Hubert being seventh in line of succession to the throne.

HIS DEMOCRATIC HIGHNESS

Disdaining the royal box at the Aintree course, His Democratic Highness, the Prince of Wales, mingles with the other residents during the running of the 1935 Grand National steeplechase, March 29th. The Prince appears to be biting his nails in his keenness for the race drawn to a close with "Reynoldstown" fourth favorite, taking first money.

The voting for officers will take place at the May meeting. Mrs. Webster presided at the meeting owing to the illness of the President Mrs. R. H. McLean.

Mrs. Andrew Palmatier is entertaining at a tea at her home on Main St. on Tuesday afternoon next in honor of her daughter Miss Marjorie Palmatier Reg. Nr. at the end of next week.

Mr. James Boird of Milford has purchased the fine farm belonging to the Myers Estate, until recently owned by Dr. E. M. Herrington, lying just outside the town limits of Picton.

Mrs. H. A. Sneyd has received the appointment, of Court Stenographer.

Dr. Gerald Allison presided at the large gathering of town and county residents, who gathered in the Regent Theatre on Friday afternoon to hear Dr. McCullough of the Ontario Department of Health speak on "Cancer". The stage was beautifully arranged with ferns, potted plants and large baskets of spring flowers, and the meeting was under the auspices of the local W. I. C. T. U.

The doctor gave an intensely interesting and hopeful lecture.

Slides borne by the doctor showed wonderful cures that had been made.

The doctor was heartily applauded for the fine address. A vocal duet by Mrs. Newman and Mrs. Waldon brought the programme to a close.

Power Contracts Bill Argued in All Night Session of Legislature

First Filibuster of Decade Caused at Second Reading

PREMIER ADAMANT

House Rises at Nine To-day But Soon Again in Session

TORONTO, April 9—(CP)—Weary and hungry, members of the Ontario Legislature called a halt for breakfast at 8.30 o'clock this morning after an all-night filibuster by Conservatives against the Government's Legislation to terminate power contracts with Quebec companies.

At nine o'clock Leopold Macaulay, former Minister of Highways, was to resume the debate that Premier Hepburn yesterday afternoon and was only interrupted for a two-hour dinner recess. It was the first filibuster in the Ontario House in more than a decade.

Since 4.05 o'clock yesterday, when Mr. Hepburn arose to speak briefly on the Bill and declared the government was ready to debate from that its intention to terminate the contracts and would sit until noon the next day if necessary, the House resumed reading eight speakers including Mr. Hepburn have taken part.

Meanwhile, Government members took turns in dozing in their chairs or in the pelatial lounge room. Three speakers occupied the chair at different times after Speaker Hon. O. Hipel left the Chamber, Three Liberals, they were: Harold J. Kemp (Toronto-Rigliton); A. St. Clair Gordon (East West) and Wilfrid Newman, Victoria-Haliburton.

Throughout the debate, the chief of order has been Opposition forces hurl charges of "repudiation" at the Government and the declaration, that never before in the province's legislative history had such a Bill been up for consideration.

M. P. P'S. SLEEPY AFTER LONG HOURS

Hon. L. Macaulay And Hon. H. Price War on Government

Toronto, Apr. 9 (CP) — Leopold Macaulay, former Ontario Minister to Highways, continuing the long debate on the power contract bill in the legislature today, said either the government or Arthur Slaght, "fine lieutenant" of Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn, should reveal what happened between the time Slaght endorsed the MacLaren-Quebec contract and the government brought in high tension pylons bill.

Mr. Macaulay spoke for three hours and thirteen minutes in the Conservative filibuster that began yesterday afternoon when Premier Hepburn brought up the bill for second reading. The former minister ended his speech at 1.31 p.m. and was followed by W. H. Price, former Attorney-General, who twice has also spoken for four and a half hours in the Conservative fourday filibuster against the Drury government's redistribution bill.

Question of Embassy.

Hon. Leopold Macaulay, leading the Conservative opposition against the government's bill to repudiate Quebec power contracts, asked in the legislature today if Premier L. A. Taschereau of Quebec had any connection in interview Premier M. F. Hepburn last week.

"Is the honorable member asking?" interjected Hon. David Croll, K.C. "I'm asking," replied Mr. Macaulay, but Mr. Croll merely said, "Oh," and the government members broke into laughter.

"Why certainly they were here," continued Mr. Macaulay, "and the premier probably is expecting them again this week. I believe Premier Taschereau will have someone at Ottawa too," he added.

Members of the government smiled again and again ignored the suggestion.

Mortgages Brought Up.

Some persons advocated reduction of mortgage principals as the value of property decreased, he said, but the attitude of the government believed by the principle of its legislation it passed up the whole Act and in to introduce a bill to bring about mortgage reductions, Mr. Macaulay informed in mortgages.

The former minister of highways said the railways had gone ahead with building programs during the early depression days, confident of an upswing. The Hydro Commission, he said, was one of the few corporations in the Dominion had done in planning for future power needs.

Mr. Macaulay brought Mayor Sam G. McGeer of Vancouver into the debate, saying his financial proposals had done Vancouver much harm. "Gerry McGeer is a very sincere man but a fanatic," he said.

The remark was made during his argument against breaking down of sacred structure through "fine statements."

COLLISION KILLS 10 SECTION HANDS REPAIRING ROAD

Light Railway Motor Car Collides With Gravel Train

DEAD IDENTIFIED

Bodies Flung Into 60 Foot Ravine Beside Tracks

Sacramento, Calif., April 9 (AP) —Ten railway section hands, working by the tropic dawn caused by record-breaking rains, were killed last night in a railroad accident near Roseville, Calif.

The accident, which occurred when the workers' light railway motor car crashed head-on into a Southern Pacific gravel train, was the worst of several, which have occurred during the storms over the State in the past three days. Nine other persons have lost their lives throughout the state, and heavy property damage has been caused by high waters.

The victims of the accident were killed instantly and their bodies flung into a 60-foot ravine by the side of the tracks, and 11th worker was possibly fatally injured, while three others escaped with minor injuries.

Nine of the dead were found immediately and identified at the Roseville morgue as: Jesus Fernandez, Caballero, A. Hernandez, Jose Varguz, E. Hernandez, R. Hernandez, Steve Pitakis, Louis Apostolis and Sam Darrow, all of Roseville. Residents found the body of Pete Fonoles in the ravine later, Attendants at the railroad receipted at Roseville said today Tony Espinoza was dying.

Threats of more serious flood hazards were believed averted today with the passing of the peak of the storm and the prospective fall of fighting waters.

Suffer From Storm

Homes, farms, crops, stores, highways and railroads all suffered from the effects of the storm in the valley sections, and in the mountains in the Sacramento and San Joaquin districts.

Records of half a century standing in Sacramento and of 22 years in Los Angeles were shattered by the rains that pushed the seasonal totals throughout the State above the normal and far above precipitation in recent years.

Valley streams were choked with the runoff from the Sierra Nevada, overflowing thousands of acres of lowlands and islo, towns.

Rising waters drove many persons from their homes and property deed were driven from river bottoms and the Sacramento delta was from three to five feet deep with the flood waters, and in cities and parts of its residential sections when the Bear Creek overflowed its banks.

Merced hotels were jammed by persons seeking their homes. Damage was estimated at $1,000,000 in that city. Boats and canoes were used in transportation as scores of automobiles stalled and several persons were taken to hospitals in high-wheel wagons.

ADOLPH S. OCHS PUBLISHER, DIES

Credited With Saving New York Times From Disaster

Chattanooga, Tenn., April 8 (AP) —The death of Adolph S. Ochs, who trod a pathway from the inky fluids of a newspaper printshop to journalistic renown as publisher of The New York Times, will be held here tomorrow morning.

Immediately afterward the body of the 77-year-old newspaperman, who died of a cerebral hemorrhage yesterday, will be taken aboard a train for New York where services will be held Friday at Temple Emanu-el.

In California, the heavy rains have forced rivers to flood stages. Currently, more than a dozen persons have lost their lives as a result of the high waters.

In the wake of a tornado's havoc, floods threatened in parts of Mississippi and Louisiana. In southeastern Kentucky, the Green and Pond rivers poured over their banks. A hundred or so families were left homeless.

ADVERTISING BAN ON SUNDAY RADIO ANNOUNCED TODAY

Question of Legality Has Been Raised by Organizations

REMOVES COMPLAINT

Chairman Says Plan is to Eliminate Solicitation

Ottawa, Apr. 9 (CP)—Spot radio advertising on Sundays will be eliminated over all Canadian stations beginning May 5, the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission announced today. The ban will not apply to time signals or certain public services. The question of excluding sales talks on Sunday broadcasts will be given further consideration.

Chairman Heclor Charlesworth of the Commission sent to all station managers a memorandum informing them:

The question of the legality under the terms of the Lord's Day Act of all kinds of Sunday advertising has been raised by various influential organizations in Canada, and Germany has agreed to consider such a proposal.

It was announced today Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald will go to Berlin in special session of League of Nations Council set for April 15, shortly after the Easter holidays, when the council considers France's protest against German rearmament.

It was understood Sir John Simon informed the German ambassador last night at Parliament previously indicated objections to the peace plan and Hitler rebuffed in the Anglo-German conference at Berlin as not being adequate.

AID REACHES THE STEAMERBAGADRY

Sends Out SOS That Hold Was 'Filling Rapidly'

New York, April 9—(AP)—Shortly after the freighter Badagry sent out its call for help, the steamship reported she had sighted the distressed vessel.

"We are now in sight of the steamer Badagry," the message from the Furness liner said, "and will advise further any details."

The Badagry, a British freighter of 5161 gross tonnage, wireless her hold was 'filling rapidly'. She had on board 200 tons due east of John's Newfoundland.

The message was picked up by the R.C.A. station at Chatham, Mass.

STUDY SUGGESTED CAPITAL OF C.N.R.

Hon. Dr. Manion Favors Appointment of Committee

OTTAWA, April 9.—(CP)—Appointment of a committee to study all angles of the Canadian National Railways Capital structure was suggested today by Minister of Railways R. J. Manion before the Railway Committee of Parliament and Canals. The committee would report to the Parliament with recommendations as to the principle of writing-down capital and the best method to be adopted.

The Minister had no quarrel with the principle of the recommendations of George A. Touche and Company, auditors of the Canadian National who were the last to recommend writing down the railway's capital. He declared there was a wide divergence of opinion throughout the country and he believed there was little appreciation of the difficulties involved in such a project.

The Minister suggested a committee of the House of Commons or the Deputy Ministers of the Department of Railways, Finance and Justice.

Sir Joseph Flavelle had recommended years ago that there should be a writing down of Canadian Pacific Railway capital stock, and it had been suggested again in 1932 by Beatty Nesbitt, then president of the system. But Sir Henry had written him in 1931, Dr. Manion said, that he believed the proposed change should not be attempted during the depression. The Duff Royal Commission on Transportation had expressed the opinion that much of the capital invested in the Canadian National should be considered lost but the time was not opportune. It declared this problem should be subject of a special report by the Board of Trustees.

NIGHT ENGINEER CHARGED

German Ambassador Told of British Views on Hitler Peace Plan

By THOMAS T. CHAMPION
Canadian Press Daily Writer

London, Apr. 9 (CP)—It was confidently stated in political circles today, on the eve of the departure of the British delegation for the meeting with France and Italy at Stresa, that the British will propose a pact of mutual assistance to be combined with limitation of air forces.

Great Britain will suggest parties to such a pact should be Germany, France, Italy, Russia and Germany, it was said. It would include an agreement on mutual assistance if any of the signatories would refuse to render assistance to any of their number attacked by another.

This plan, in a more restricted sense, was submitted to the Anglo-French conference in January and Germany has agreed to consider such a proposal.

It was announced today Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald will go to Berlin in special session of League of Nations Council set for April 15, shortly after the Easter holidays, when the council considers France's protest against German rearmament.

It was understood Sir John Simon informed the German ambassador last night at Parliament previously indicated objections to the peace plan and Hitler rebuffed in the Anglo-German conference at Berlin as not being adequate.

THIRTY SEVEN MEN ON WAY TO CAMP

Loaded down with kit and baggage, and smiling broadly at the prospect of work, thirty-seven local men left the city by truck from the Campbell Street office of the Employment Service Bureau at 10.30 Tuesday morning, bound for the Trent Valley Road Camp on the Belleville-Napanee Highway, North Hastings, shortly before eleven o'clock this morning. On Wednesday a second "draft" of about twenty men is expected, to leave for the same camp. Only hardened men had registered for the second draft, which will replace the first shift of workers but owing to the quarantine still in effect at the camps, only smaller drafts can be sent.

PLASTERER NEEDED TO FINISH JOB

City officials were thumbing through the list of available plasterers of the city today in an almost vain attempt to find a workman to perform a local job. Owing to the sudden demand for plasterers at the Royal Air Force Camp on the Trent Road during the past week or so, a acute scarcity of this class of workmen is noted in the city. At the present time work of plastering the interior of both lavatories in the basement of city hall is held up until a capable plasterer is secured.

LITTLE HEAVING ON NORTH ROADS

Roads throughout the county are in perfect shape for traffic it was reported today by a local resident, who has been spending the past week in an extended tour of the northern section of Hastings. Only in some isolated sections has any frost damage been noticed. This year, owing to favorable weather conditions soft spots and heaving are reported to be entirely absent.

SIGNS POINT TO WARMER WEATHER

Swallows and butterflies, bluebirds and woodchucks, and even the croaking of frogs plainly evident throughout this district at the present time have brought the section warm weather. Swallows are reported here and already are signs of nest building according to a local naturalist. Throughout local marshes the first spring song of the frogs is also reported.

HOLLOWAY Y.P.S. CLOSES SEASON

Banquet Enjoyed And Mr. Archibald is Guest Speaker

About fifty members and guests of the Holloway Street United Church Young People's Society enjoyed a banquet in the church hall last evening. The event marked the official closing of the society for the year 1934-35.

Miss Audrey Anderson, President of the union was the master of ceremonies for the occasion. With a few well chosen words, the President reviewed the activities and the pleasant fellowship, that was had in the union during the past year. Mr. Harold Sandler rendered a solo in his usual capable manner. Mr. Bruce Sills gave a selection on his accordian, which was greatly enjoyed.

The guest speaker of the evening was Mr. A. D. Archibald teacher at the local collegiate institute. He was introduced by Mr. Jack Newman. Mr. Archibald had been guest of the union at an event during the year with success. His topic for that occasion was "Building" dealing primarily with youth. He continued with this theme last night. The essential element in the building of youth is to build a fine character," declared the speaker. "The outlook of the youth of today is very discouraging. They go through school and when they get through, there is seldom a position awaiting them. If they are unfortunate to obtain work the wages are often so low it is enough to put them on the brink of despair." Mr. Archibald here gave some statistics of the wages a woman girl is are making in a factory in Quebec. A great many of them are receiving 5 cents an hour for their labour, some are receiving 6 cents, while the highest paid today is girls are 11 cents an hour. "Small wonder so many are on relief today hasn't so much optimism for the future," Mr. Archibald said.

Why not have a youth movement in Canada? Other countries like Great Britain, Germany, Italy, Russia, etc., have youth movements. Youth is the backbone of these countries. It has been estimated, that there are over 2,000,000 young people in Canada between the ages of Sunday schools young people's societies and other organizations. There is therefore plenty of material, but the lack is a great leader.

There are many problems confronting that youth has and should retain, spiritual qualities. Among problems the youth of Canada is losing some of its spiritual life. Why not stir up the youth of today and build up in them essential qualities and keep them on the right road, following the speaker.

Lyle Tweddy on behalf of the society thanked Mr. Archibald for his illuminating address. Mr. Chas. Hagerman gave a reading. The singing of "Good Night Ladies" brought the event to a close.

RETREAT IS HELD AT ST. MICHAEL'S

Rev. John Knox, S. J., Preaches on Sacrament of Penance

St. Michael's Church was thronged with women and girls of the parish last evening for the continuation of the Retreat being conducted by Rev. John Knox, S.J. The speaker delivered an eloquent sermon on the Sacrament of Penance and the important part he holds in the life of the church. Quoting the words of our Lord to the apostles, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost, whose sins you shall forgive they are forgiven them and whose sins you shall retain they are retained" (20th chapter of St. John) and the words, "Whatsoever you shall bind upon earth, shall be bound also in Heaven, and whatsoever you shall loose upon earth, shall be loosed also in Heaven" (18th chapter, St. Matthew), we conclude that the power of forgiving sins was given the apostles. This power has come down from them to their successors. Christ performed the miracle of curing a man sick of the palsy for the express purpose of proving that He, as man, had the power on earth to forgive sins.

The Sacrament of Penance forgives sins committed after baptism. It is composed of three elements, contrition, confession, satisfaction, on the part of the penitent. The penitent must detest and renounce his sins. He must confess them to the priest. He must be required to expiate. Contrition is absolutely necessary. This consists of hatred for past sin and a firm resolution to avoid sin and the occasions of sin for the future. Our Divine Lord showed His mercy by establishing this Sacrament, as it is a means of pardon for sins committed after baptism. The missionary exhorted his hearers to make frequent use of this wonderful means of grace.

Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament was celebrated by Rev. E. M. Leacy of Deseronto. Large numbers attended the Masses this morning at six, seven, eight and nine o'clock. The Retreat continues this evening at seven-thirty.

BOY FOUND ILL UNDERNEATH BUSH

Schoolboy Recovers From Spell After Long Exposure

Found lying in a semi-conscious condition underneath a clump of bushes, James A. Miller, aged 14 years of 12 Wilkins street, was rushed to the Belleville General Hospital by ambulance this afternoon by local police. Upon his arrival at that institution and examination by Dr. Morgan it was discovered that the boy was suffering from exposure following an all night spell.

The boy had left home early yesterday morning bound for school, but did not return home for his mid-day meal. Communicating with the school officials, his anxious parents were informed, that the lad had not reported for school. After search he was found lying unconscious under a clump of bushes on the Yeomans Street Commons, which he crosses to and from school each day. It is believed by his parents that the lad was taken ill and fell near the clump of bushes, where evidently obstructed the view of passers-by.

Upon the arrival of the city ambulance to the scene of the trouble, the vehicle could not get very near to pass over the soft ground of the Yeomans Street Commons and a stretcher-case. The ambulance was immediately abandoned by the police and a passing motor car was commandeered to rush the youth to the hospital, where he is reported to have improved sufficiently as to be able to return home today. The city ambulance was towed out of the mire, with the assistance of two large tow trucks.

SALESMAN FORCED TO RETURN MONEY

Alleged Shady Deal Pulled by Sale of Linoleum

A salesman called at the residence of a well-known farmer of this vicinity a few days ago to dispose of his wares which in this case happened to be linoleum. The farmer was captivated by the smoothness of the salesman and agreed to buy some. He measured the floor and paid for the order by cheque payable at a local bank.

After the salesman had gone the farmer opened his mail-box and found he claims it was only half there. He immediately telephoned the bank and advised the bank to stop payment of the cheque. The banker informed him that the money was already paid out. He mentioned the case to Detective-Sergeant Isard of the local force. Inside half an hour the man was found out by Detective Isard, which happened to be in one of the nearby cottages.

The outcome was that the farmer got his money back and the salesman left for parts unknown.

Police News

Despite cobtinued warnings out-of-town motorists continue to park their automobiles in the down-town area all night, four such offenders were summoned into the police station this morning, when police stickers were affixed their cars by local constables while making their rounds early this morning. As pointed out by the police today this practice of all-night parking must cease as it impedes the progress of the city sweeper, that operates in the early hours of the morning. Fines are to be imposed in the future.

Only nine transients occupied the cells in the police station last night, all being instructed to "move on" when released this morning. No serious motor accidents were reported by the traffic officers patrolling the streets adjacent to Belleville this morning, when the atmosphere around local police courts was also serene, no arrests being recorded.

APPEAL PAPER FOUND IN FYLES

Los Angeles, April 9.—A drama of legal errors reached a climax late last night when court officials solemnly filed an appeal to save the life of a man hanged four days ago.

Rush Griffin, 19-year-old negro, died on the gallows at San Quentin prison Friday, with an appeal already perfected, which made stay of execution automatic— resting in files of a lower court clerk's office, apparently forgotten. He had been convicted of killing a medical student.

Richard F. Bird, Griffin's counsel, received first news of the negro's execution in the newspapers. He promptly started an investigation to determine what happened to the appeal. It was duly filed with a transcript of the record.

Court Clerk C. E. Boardman admitted the error. The appeal, made legally effective two months ago—so far as the defence could make it —was still in his office.

"I guess it was my fault," Boardman said.

And so, carrying the sequence of blunders to its grim conclusion, he ordered the appeal filed and transmitted to the State Supreme Court where—if legal machinery does not break down—a stay of execution will be issued to save the life of the dead man.

MUTUAL AID PACT IS FORESEEN IN BRITISH PLAN

Adolf Hitler was not prepared to sign any eastern European pact implying mutual assistance, particularly any pact with Russia, said the Foreign Secretary. Britain has favored non-aggression pacts between the powers interested in eastern Europe with provisions for consultation in the event of aggression.

British Superiority

The Germans had suggested if hostilities broke out, the other powers should engage themselves only to support an aggressor in any way. He said Hitler dwelt particularly on the difficulties in identifying the aggressor.

Just previously Sir Philip Sasson, Under-Secretary for Air told questioners taking all factors into account he still believed the British air force had a margin of superiority over Germany despite Hitler's claim Germany had reached parity with Britain in the air.

German Demands

The Foreign Secretary gave the first official version of the military, naval and air demands made by Hitler in his talks in Berlin. These include an army of 36 divisions, totalling not more than 550,000 men; including the Schutz-Staffel and militarized police; a navy 35 per cent of the tonnage of the British navy; parity in the air with Britain or France with an eye also to the Russian air force.

Regarding Russia, Sir John said Anthony Eden, Lord Privy Seal had learned in Moscow the Soviets consider the present international situation more favorable than ever and necessary "to endeavor to promote the building of a security system for Europe, as contemplated by the Anglo-French communique of London and the principals of the League of Nations."

Soviets And Eastern Pact

He said the Soviets viewed the eastern pact as not aimed at the encirclement of any state and as providing equal security for all participants. Britain believed that the participation of Germany and Poland in the pact would help find the solution to the eastern European problem.

He said Germany demanded the right to possess all the types of arms used by other countries and not relinquishing them until the others did the same. Germany stated if an arms limitation agreement was reached, Germany would work on an agreement of permanent automatic supervision if applied to all powers equally.

Disappointment Expressed

"I have confined myself," Sir John told the House, "to an account of what was said by the others but it must not be supposed the British ministers (himself and Captain Eden) did not indicate strong disagreement at certain points, and indeed, at the end of the Berlin interview, I expressed disappointment at the difficulties disclosed in the way of an agreement."

Winston Churchill, Britain's colony demand, Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald said General Smuts was not considering giving up any mandated territory, saying he felt there was no chance of Germany returning to the League of Nations "in the present circumstances."

ROTARIANS HEAR BRIG. GEN. ROSS DESCRIBE BATTLE

Guest Speaker at Luncheon Commemorates Vimy Day

A STORM CENTRE

Vimy Ridge Battle Anniversary was commemorated by Belleville Rotary Club Monday, the guest speaker being Brigadier-General A. E. Ross, C.M.G., D.S.O., who took part in the battle as director of medical services.

General Ross was introduced to Rotary by Col. Roscoe Vanderwater, an overseas comrade, who outlined briefly some of the outstanding services rendered the Empire and the nation by the guest speaker. A veteran of the South African War in which he served as a private, Brigadier-General Ross is one of the surviving members of the gallant Canadian First Division, and in the opinion of Col. Vanderwater, one of three greatest Canadians in the war. He is a Past Grand Master of the Independent Order of Oddfellows, and member of the Dominion Parliament for Kingston City.

Vimy Ridge was the first great battle of the war entrusted entirely to the Canadians, the four divisions taking part, and the result brought great honour to the Canadian army and to the nation, said General Ross.

Gen. Byng Approves

Describing Vimy Ridge which dominated as such all of the level country of Flanders, General Ross explained why it was imperative that the Allies control it. Aside from its strategical value it dominated a large industrial country including French coal mines which it was necessary to keep in French hands. Vimy Ridge was a storm centre, being alternately stormed by British and French forces and then recovered by the enemy. It was the task assigned the Canadians to take Vimy Ridge and hold it. That they performed this duty gloriously history records. Every supports breaking on every side the Canadians calmly held the ridge, performing all that was asked of them and more, receiving the unqualified approval of their grand old soldier, General Byng, who expressed unlimited admiration for the Canadians' courage, stamina and initiative.

One significant feature of Vimy Ridge lies in the graves of forty thousand French soldiers, who cheerfully gave up their lives to prevent the German war machine from rolling on to Paris and the Channel ports.

Stream of Wounded

A graphic description of the assault which carried the heights of Vimy after two months' preparation was given by General Ross, who said that the drain on the medical service was tremendous and many times during the battle he prayed for just ten minutes peace to reassemble faculties jarred and strained through the limit of endurance as the wounded streamed back from the front in endless parade. The first twenty-two hours of action saw 5,960 wounded men passed back to medical casualty clearing stations in the rear, after receiving first aid at the front.

Faces Shot and Shell

Eighty thousand Canadians, assisted by forty-five thousand British troops, and fifty thousand artillery men in the rear, with the force assigned to take the ridge after preliminary bombardment. There was only one direct road to the Ridge and that made for congestion but the action was carried through perfectly according to plans and the Germans' nerve nerve faltered, the hill being taken with a rush in the face of severe machine gun and artillery fire. The enemy was swept helter skelter from Vimy Ridge and driven back to join with the Canadians. The Germans never got a foothold on Vimy Ridge again and they had a wholesome respect for those dashing Canucks whom nothing apparently could stop.

First Great Battle

While there were other great actions in which the Canadians took leading part, Passchendaele and the Somme, Vimy Ridge was the first great victory in the war for the Canadian forces as a unit and as such will always be remembered with pride by all Canadians.

Closing with a review of the causes of the present warlike conditions in Europe, General Ross expressed the opinion that there will always be war until Christian nations, without creed or barriers, lived up to the religion of that Great Prophet and Teacher, who "Love thy neighbour as thyself." Russia with its communistic campaign to capture the world for Communism, was a deadly peril, and one of the causes for the unrest in Germany and Asia for rearmament. Germany had never been thoroughly beaten, had never felt the horrors of war within her own borders and the German youth, amazingly under-fed, and the mistakes of the Versailles Treaty were anxious to put Germany back on the map as a leading world nation. Christianity is undergoing a severe test, declared the General. Christianity is our civilization—without it civilization perishes, but hypocrisy must be cast out. Christianity is being persecuted in the countries where the service clubs and is the only force which will preserve the world from the horrors of future wars. As another Easter season approaches it is well, said General Ross, to consider deeply and act accordingly. Rotary supports and supports breading on every side the Canadians calmly held the ridge, performing all that was asked of them and more, receiving the unqualified approval of their grand old soldier, General Byng, who expressed unlimited admiration for the Canadians' courage, stamina and initiative.

Bread a Scientific Product

Bread has long been employed by writers and orators as a symbol for food. One reason for this is because it is the most universal of all forms of sustenance, as well as one of the oldest in the history of mankind. In all parts of the world, among all races and classes, bread is a staple article of diet. Whether it is the coarse, black bread of the Scandinavian peasant, or the delicate product of a great modern bakery, it occupies a place of primary importance in the life of man. Whatever our tastes may differ in form or colour there is all more have bread. And the quality of the bread we eat is of more importance than many of us realise. The housewives who choose the family's food with a view to health-giving qualities, are most particular about the bread they order. This is one reason for the great demand for Linn's Bread in the homes of this city.

Linn's Bread is everything that good bread should be. Its ingredients are selected with the utmost care and the scientific methods by which the bread is mixed and baked give it the highest degree of nutriment. Not only is Linn's Bread nourishing, sustaining, and easy to digest, it is a delicacy. There is nothing flat or insipid about Linn's Bread. Its wholesome, delicious flavor delights the taste and tempts even the appetite. That is why it's so popular with both children and adults. Linn's Bread forms an important part of every meal, and when you feel the need of something to eat between meals, it is an ideal snack. It makes delicious sandwiches for the picnic or afternoon tea. Linn's Bakery serves this city with a regular delivery daily, and a special one when required. The telephone number is 635.

Insist upon the bread of the European peasant to the snow white product of our modern Belleville bakeries, quality must come first. Hence the suggestion—Linn's Bread. (Protected 1935).

POWER CONTRACTS BILL ARGUED

Adjourn For Breakfast

Shortly after seven o'clock this morning, George S. Henry, Opposition leader, suggested an adjournment for breakfast and Hon. Peter Heenan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture, who was leading the House, agreed. An hour will be taken at nine a.m.

Last attempt to block legislation was in 1925 when the Drury Government attempted to pass gallery Redistribution Bill. Stubborn opposition developed in building's corridors the Government going to the Province in a general election.

Throughout the night spectators' chairs were packed. The crowd dwindled to one o'clock but a few of the more interested remained throughout the night, some stretching out in sleep along the soft benches. Early in the morning the leader of a Toronto dance orchestra demanded of his musicians dropped in for the occasion. The press gallery was host to workers on morning newspapers.

"This is rank repudiation," said Opposition Leader Henry of the Bill. He admitted Ontario had its debts to pay but said if it was possible to negotiate a reduction of interest rate some revision he would be the first to support the Government.

Mr. Henry called to the attention of the Government the artificial effect of the termination on bidding's credit in the British market and declared the Bill should be thrown out if not beneath Ontario's dignity to allow such legislation on the Statute books.

Modern Methods Simplify Moving

We have a message this week for those of our readers who are about to move. Moving usually entails a great deal of worry and bother perhaps even under the best of circumstances but there is really no reason for the operation to be one of cowright discomfort. A little preparation and a call with the management of a responsible moving concern eliminates the possibility.

Here in our city F. Le Pain at 221 Pinnacle St. offers you this excellent service in this regard. Mrs. Irained in the business of moving are associated with this concern, thoughtful care and considerate courtesy characterize their work. They understand how to unload and load a van—how to pack and crate when this is required of them and they work speedily and quietly. Actually this business of moving need not be an unpleasant jumble. But that it be carried out smoothly the assistance of experts is needed to handle your goods efficiently and the firm we suggest does this.

We suggest them because their rates are very reasonable. Their estimates cheerfully whether it be to move a single piano or all your household effects from one house to next door, to another part of the city or to any part of this country. They are on the job at the time their promise for they maintain sufficient equipment to fill all orders with rapidity and dispatch. Goods can be entrusted to their care for storage with confidence and they operate an efficient storage plant transfer service. Phone 1006 and this coming moving affair will be done quickly, carefully, inexpensively and will be all over in a "jiffy." (Protected 1935).

LAPOINTE LEADS MOVE TO BLOCK A LONG RECESS

Also Asks Referendum on Banning of Titles in Canada

RECESS WARRANTED

Says Hon. Hugh Guthrie in Speaking For Government

Ottawa, April 9 (CP)—Canadians would vote on the question of titles at a National referendum, Hon. Ernest Lapointe, former Minister of Justice, has his way. Reports that a number of Canadians would receive titles in connection with King's Jubilee drew a protest from the member for Quebec East as he led a Liberal move to block a long adjournment of parliament at Easter.

Sound reasons and good business warranted the long adjournment, said Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of Justice, who announced the government's intention of pressing for a cessation of business and sitting actively until May 20. Mr. Guthrie made no mention of Mr. Lapointe's title referendum suggestion, which came up in debate Monday.

Liberal back benchers are enjoying a turn at speech-making today while Conservatives remain silent. The prevailing trend of the past few weeks was demonstrated again by the new tactical move launched by Mr. Lapointe. All during the budget debate and during most of the discussion on the government's social reform bills Liberals have held their peace, claiming they wanted to get business over and the session and have an early election.

Liberals Warming Up

Now they are making the sort of speeches the Conservatives made in the budget debate and the Conservatives remain silent. Mr. Lapointe moved an amendment to the formal motion to go into committee of ways and means declaring the Easter adjournment should be for not more than one week. A long succession of Liberal speakers followed and more have speeches ready for today.

The present parliament had gone two years, Mr. Ellis and he warned private Mr. Lapointe said in his argument against the long adjournment. Seldom had parliaments continued for their full five year term. Under the circumstances the session should not be needlessly prolonged. In 1926 the Conservatives had objected to the long summer recess and the considerable absence of the Prime Minister. They should not ask for the same thing now in the same circumstances.

There was another reason against an adjournment as the government had lost its confidence of the people. This was shown by the byelections and by the municipal elections in which Federal issues were freely discussed.

Mr Lapointe went over the Speech from the Throne read at the opening of parliament, claiming many of its promises had not been kept. Parliament should not adjourn until they were. Mr. Gardiner's Minimum Wage Bill, for instance, remained on the order paper for second reading. It could be pushed through rather than the House adjourning. So could the Grain Board Bill.

It was "extraordinary presumption" for the government to propose a five weeks' adjournment, while "anger and impatience rage in the country," Mr. Lapointe said.

Parliament, Mr. Lapointe said, was suffering from senility and the

Purity and Freshness

Users of tobacco in any form are always assured of purity and freshness when they buy a product of the Imperial Tobacco Company. These qualities are achieved only by the practice of eternal vigilance.

That vigilance starts with the education of the grower, in methods of cutting and curing that ensure the utmost cleanliness and wholesomeness in the leaf as delivered. The grading is all done over screens, to remove sand. Leaves showing any blemish are immediately destroyed. After that the stock is submitted to a forced-draft heat treatment that mellows and conditions the tobacco.

During the three-year ageing process, the leaf lies packed in hogsheads, for, like wine, it mellows best in wood. These hogsheads are stored in bond by themselves in modern warehouses through which the outside air moves freely. The sweating induced by summer heat and humidity has the effect of dispelling harshness, and leaving the leaf sweeter and softer to the taste.

During the manufacturing process, as a protection against even the most remote possibility of contamination, the leaf is handled in rooms where the air is filtered of all impurities, humidified to prevent dust, and where walls are being constantly whitewashed.

Yet that is only the beginning. Every single shipment of a material that directly or indirectly enters into the manufacture of any Imperial product must first pass its prescribed laboratory test, to determine whether it fully measures up to the purity standard set for it. If not, it is instantly rejected. And in the case of cigarette paper, there are easily a dozen different tests, chemical and physical, that must be survived before any shipment is permitted to be used.

When the manufactured tobacco is ready for packaging, it is of course in prime condition. It is to ensure its reaching the consumer in equally good condition that so much care is taken, so much expense incurred, with the wrapping. Waxed paper, tin foil, cellophane, snugly-fitting packages and hermetically-sealed tins are only a few of the devices employed to conserve freshness.

Finally, such is the reputation enjoyed by Imperial products for purity and freshness, that the large and steady demand for them assures a quickness of turnover that precludes any possibility of their growing stale on the retailer's shelves.

BANK SEES BUSINESS TRENDS

The Bank of Nova Scotia has issued a chart showing basis statistics of business in Canada, using as base 100 the average of the period 1925-1929.

The cumulative index for February, 1935, showed 85.8 as against 83.6 for December 1934, 83.4 for November, 83.8 for October, 82.6 for September, 1934, and 82.2 for February, 1934.

General industrial employment last February stood at 95.4 as against 89.8 in September last and 92 in February of 1934.

Wholesale prices in Canada showed: February, 1935, 71.7; December, 71.1; February, 1934, 71.8.

Number of revenue carloadings 74.8 in February, 1935; 64.7 in September and 67.8 in February a year ago.

Volume of industrial production grew most from 77.7 in February a year ago, to 93.3 in February this year.

Rate of turnover of Bank deposits 87.0 in February, 1934, 81.8 in February, 1935.

The sharp recession in the index of the rate of turnover of bank deposits approximately offsets the advances. The decline equivalent to a contraction of about seven-seventh, wiped out the major part of the gains recorded in this index since the low point of the depression. Developments both within and outside the Dominion presumably discouraged financial activity by disturbing confidence," says the bank's statement.

The gain in industrial employment was the fifth consecutive rise of substantial proportions.

AT A LEPER HOSPITAL

There has been received in the city a copy of the report of the Cochin State Leper Hospital at Adoor which is managed by the Salvation Army Medical Department in South India.

Of this hospital the superintendent is Adjutant Edwin H. Frisbie, who was in Belleville some months ago. Owing to the interest of Belleville folk in his work, some details of the hospital are given. The accommodation is 300 although as high as 328 persons have been accommodated. For many months now the number received has been 300.

A church has been built for the use of the patients of the Roman Catholic community through the generosity of the Bishops of Ernakulam and Trichur and the assistance of the Government.

A prayer hall has been constructed for Sabbatarians and Protestant Christians previously no permanent place of worship had been provided for them. Gifts from the staff and S. A. officers in Cochin and Travancore and a few friends made the building possible.

Twenty-five acres is under cultivation on the non-leper section.

The hospital reports a grant from the Darbar for the feast of patients on the occasion of the Maharaja's birthday, and sums left by Hindus and officers for feasts for the patients.

In this colony real education is carried on. Nine patients act as teachers and now there are 38 children attending the four classes. A night school has been started for adults. Two of the older boys have been drafted to the carpentry class and one to the bootmaker but at their own request are still attending school when English lessons are in progress. Weaving is taught. Walks are laid out for exercise purposes and organized games are given place in the routine. The matron conducts a class for women in elementary English.

There is in the near future the likelihood of a new recreation hall, in memory of the late Dr. Coombes, a former chief medical and sanitary officer of the state. Musical meetings are held and the patients reveal unexpected talent. The brass band plays a large part in the life of the people in the institution despite discouraging losses, the members persevering in playing despite the disabilities imposed by the disease. Of course the gramophone is a constant friend and is taken round the rooms.

Even in this part of the world the radio set given by the Salvation Army has ceased to excite wonder. The broadcast comes from Bombay or Colombo.

The sports days excite much enthusiasm. Football attracts the younger and more robust type of patient.

A home was opened a year ago for untainted children.

Two or three facts stand out: In spite of differences of creed and castes, the community spirit is slowly but surely growing. The common bond of suffering makes for a great brotherhood; the patients look happy because they are taught to see the joy there is in life irrespective of physical infirmities; human weakness is noted here as everywhere else where work is concerned. "Able-bodies patients are encouraged to work for an hour from five-thirty in the morning at such tasks as weeding, but it is surprising to note how many develop fever at the stroke of the starting bell," says the report. Man is much the same the world over.

Dr. D. Raghavendra Rao, the medical officer, is given high praise.

For the agencies which serve suffering mankind there is nothing but praise. What good these servants of mankind do for their less fortunate brothers and sisters of the East only eternity can tell.

RECALLING HIS NATIVE SPOT

"The song is ended but the melody lingers on" was the refrain of a popular Irving Berlin song some years ago, but it seems to express the spirit of Pierce Kingsley, native of Belleville and former actor on the United States stage who died in retirement some weeks ago. The Thespian was the author of a number of successes and at times wrote verse. Back in 1905 he penned a few lines from the standpoint of a Belleville native who was dreaming of the old haunts about which his memory clung. The verses he sent to the late W. P. McMahon, a well-known Belleville lawyer of that time. Today they are republished as a sort of Ave atque Vale to a player who made the world happier with his gifts, who won acclaim in the big world faraway but to whom like all men of consequence, the place of his birth was the central factor in his makeup. His verse runs:

In The City By The Bay

Where the old Moira's wending
In its peaceful wake serene,
The happy days of childhood
In my memory I've seen.
Though I roam the wide world over
And to distant lands I stray,
My heart will ever linger
In the City by the Bay.

Chorus—
In the City by the Bay,
We are meeting here today.
To renew our old friendships once again
And no matter where we roam,
We still love our native home
And true to it we will remain,
Mid the maples and the flowers,
Where we spent our boyhood hours,
In dear old Belleville City by the Bay.

Where the old Bay Quinte rippling
With her dancing waves of blue,
Upon her shiny bosom,
Bids a welcome home to you,
Though her children may have scattered
And some have been laid away,
Their memory is dear to us,
In the City by the Bay.

TWO KINDS OF CREDITORS

Creditors are of two kinds—past and future. The last creditor is the man who lent us money last year, or the year before last, or some time in 1919 or 1929. He is public enemy No. 1. He is a bloodsucker. He is a grinder of the faces of the poor. He is a kulak. He ought to be liquidated. He ought to be gleichgeschaltet. Above all, he ought not to be paid.

Paid? Why, the rascal scoundrel took advantage of us last year or the year before last, or in 1919 or 1929. He deceived us. He cheated us into accepting his money and giving him our I.U. Johns, knowing all the time that prices were going to go down and the value of money was going to go up, and we should never be able to pay him. We didn't know it. We didn't know it; we're only debtors; debtors are simple honest folk who believe whatever the creditors tell them, and the creditors always tell them the gospel truth. The truth. Bu he knew it, and let us go on believing that prices were going up and money was going down and the wicked rate of interest to borrow. And now he wants to be paid!

The future creditor is the man who is perhaps going to lend us money next month or next year to spend on restoring or enlarging our productive equipment so that we can employ more workers and sell more goods and make more money. He is public hero No. 1. He is the saviour of his country. He is the friend of the poor. He is the indispensable agent of economic recovery. He is the backbone of civilization. He ought to be revered. He ought to be canonized. He ought—in due time—even to be paid.

Paid? Why yes, of course he will be paid. Where did you get the idea that there could be any doubt about it? Aren't we willing to sign any undertaking that he likes in exchange for his money? (not as individuals, of course; that is at the moment a bit too risky. But as municipalities, hydros, provinces, the Dominion, sure. And isn't our signature good?)

No, sir, now is the time for all good lenders to come to the aid of the country. There must be a renewal of credit. We must all have faith in the future. We must start spending money, and since the state will have to do the spending it will have to be other people's money.—Toronto Saturday Night.

ROMANCE

You do not have to see a play
Or read a book or go away
To Spain or France;
No need to wait a lifetime's span
Or join a gypsy caravan
To find romance.

For romance is a flower which blooms
In sunny fields or sunless rooms
With equal grace;
Look deep in eyes of girl or boy,
Read all the wonder there, the joy
Of life's embrace.

In other eyes whence youth has fled
See memories of days long sped,
Of chance and chance;
And, woven through every varying mood
Which can on human heart intrude,
Glimpse bright romance!

ANOTHER ANNIVERSARY OF VIMY RIDGE brings back proud memories of that famous ridge which kept changing hands in the Great World War, being alternately held by the Germans and Allies until the Canadians received permission to storm it. Capture it they did in grand style and what's more held it despite breaking of supports to right and left. What we have we hold was the Canadian slogan and Vimy Ridge was held. The price, but that's another story, was heavy but wounded and being cleared back to medical bases in the first twenty-two hours.

RECENT EXCAVATIONS in the land of the Old Testament pile up more proof of the authenticity of the Bible and are accepted by scientists as such. The scientists keep searching for proof that will turn the Bible into fiction, but keep stumbling upon fresh proof that it is genuine. LINCOLN, HUEY LONG, William J. Bryan, Roosevelt and others are discussed in a breezy letter from our Los Angeles correspondent, published Friday. Aside from pointing with sorrow to the effects of the too vigorous efforts of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce to attract tourists with the result that thousands of work-seekers are stranded among the flowers and fleas of the Sinclair-Townsend Easy Money Belt, while warning the Belleville C. of C. not to get thistaway, Mac puts the up-and-coming sign on the next president as, horror of horrors, that windbag Huey Long, "Kingfish" of Louisiania and master politician. He also removes some of the halo from the revered brow of The Great Emancipator, and asserts that it would have been cheaper to buy the blacks' freedom with cash rather than pay for it in the best blood of the North and South. Hence it is assured that Mac has become embued with Democratic principles since pitching his tent on the sands of the Pacific where Mack Sennett's Bathing Beauties have proved that Hollywood sunshine and Pacific breezes, mathematically speaking, combine at just about the right figure. Mac says that the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce has reversed its policy and is now busily engaged trying to discourage folks from leaving their homes in the East with a view of pitching their tents in the Valley of The Moon and spending the remainder of their days in luxurious idleness, feeding on oranges, flowers and Upton Sinclair's theories.

In the Sunday School Basketball League last night at the Y.M.C.A. Holloway Intermediates defeated St. Andrew's. The latter team was handicapped in not having Erastus Grant to play for them, he being at his home in Tweed. Art. Hewitt, as sub, played a good game, but had had no practice all winter. The West Belleville boys showed up well in the combination, Hently starring in this connection, while Dunsferd and "Twigg" Woodley looked the basket for most of the points made. Ross at centre played a great game. Russell Wordley played defence to perfection. Jackson, especially in the last half, played his chafve check. "Twigg" for all he was worth and his partner in defence, Kel. Roberts, was pulling the ball down out of the atmosphere every time it came his way. Brooks and Penn for St. Andrew's played like Trojans. The following composed the teams: St. Andrew's (13)—Brown, Brock, Penn, Roberts and Jackson. West Belleville (41) — Ross, "Twigg" Woodley, Dunsberry, Russell Woodley and Hently.

Mr. W. H. Nugent of Coe Hill, Reeve of Wollaston Township was in the city today.

Front Street was scraped this morning and the dust will soon be flying.

The residents of West Belleville who have to pass through the foot bridge gangway, will be pleased to learn that the place is to be cleaned.

Mr. J. R. Brower, cheese buyer, left today for England on business.

Mr. Chas. Steward left today for Chesterville to ship a large quantity of cheese from that place.

Bridge street from Church street is in a disgraceful state. The building of the sewer last fall put the road-way in bad condition and it has never been put in good order since that time.

CARRYING PLACE

BABY IS FOUND DEAD IN CRIB

Infant Son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Davis Suffocates in Sleep

Carrying Place—The sad death of Baby Walter Frederick Davis, two months old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Davis of Murray Canal, occurred at the home on Tuesday some time during the forenoon. No idea that anything was amiss with the child had been entertained by any members of the family until the mother went to the crib to get it to give it its morning bath. Called to the scene, Coroner Dr. Rundle of Brighton declared that death was due to suffocation. Interment of the baby was made in the local cemetery on Wednesday afternoon. It will be remembered Mr. Davis' son, Gordon, came to his death by accident during the summer of 1931, while his first wife Mrs. Davis died a year ago.

The regular bi-weekly meeting of the Women's Association of the United Church was held on Wednesday last in the United Church Hall. Eight members answered the roll-call, and the programme for the afternoon was opened with singing of hymn 38 from the Hymnal, followed by the repetition in concert of the Lord's Prayer. Devotional exercises were conducted by Mrs. J. M. Hamilton who read Psalm 42 and followed it with a short prayer. Missionary collection amounted to $5.25. Five cents. Following a short period of business discussion the members began the work of stocking and constructing a new quilt for the society. Later in the afternoon lunch was served by Mrs. George Brown, and Mrs. R. H. Hennessey. The meeting of June 5th was adjourned after the repeating of the Mizpah Benediction.

Mr. Will Corrigan sustained the loss of a horse on Tuesday of this week when an animal that had showed few previous signs of ailments was found dead in the morning and had to be destroyed. As a result Mr. Corrigan made a motor trip to the Bancroft area on the following day looking for a team to buy.

Radio and newspaper reports on Thursday of last week carried accounts of the coming to Toronto harbor of the S. S. Cadwell to open navigation for the Queen City port for the season. The Cadwell is well known here, passing regularly through the Murray Canal during the summer navigation season. Incidentally there is a possibility that there may soon be boats travelling in local waters, as canal authorities are said to have been informed of the government tender "Crerwillet" some time soon to set the buoys in Brighton harbor and points beyond.

There is a local story to the effect that the Government co-operated fog-horn at Presqu'ile Point is to be abandoned and replaced by an electric beacon in an economy effort. Friends of Mr. Thos Carnegie present owner of the Presqu'ile light, are hoping that this is not true.

Mr. Carnegie is a son-in-law of Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Wannamaker.

Mrs. R. H. Hennessey spent several days recently in Trenton with her son, Mr. Ewart Hennessey and wife.

Mr. Robert Smithson of Trenton spent a half-day at the local public school on Friday last teaching the fifth class as part of a teaching examination. Inspector A. A. Martin was present as examiner.

Local teachers were hosts on Wednesday evening last to the teachers of Murray Township who gathered for one of their regular monthly meetings. Cro-inole games, contests, music and an impromptu play made up the entertainment for the evening, and it was well after midnight when, after the serving of lunch, the guests departed.

Messrs Asa Wannamaker, Alex Campbell and members of the road maintenance group are busy deepening and straightening ditches in an effort to carry away some surplus water. There are a few things locally that give more pleasure to motorists than the new highway. Memories of other days of other years cling.

Mr. Michael Perrow of Murray Canal has recently made an exchange of motor cars. Mr. Cliff Oakes is also another "car-trader" these days.

Once again far in the lead of local local gardeners Mr. James Greig, enterprising Scot, has begun the planting of his garden. His palm and flower beds are ready grooved and we are expecting that once again he will have the first new potatoes of the community.

The coming epidemic that has so troubled local fathers, mothers and children is still very much in evidence. Now the attendance is saying that warm weather will make a change in their unpleasant conditions.

Our King and Queen

The King and Queen After the War

THE war was over. Great lines of rejoicing—a rejoicing mingled with sorrow for those who were never to come back.

In London the celebrating populace seemed naturally to turn their steps toward Buckingham Palace. There King George and Queen Mary stood for hours on the balcony to receive the plaudits of the tremendous throng who in this time respected the monarchy more than at any time in many years.

But hard work was not ended. With the end of the war came the task of rehabilitation, readjustment to new conditions of living. In this work, the King and Queen played their parts magnificently. They were everywhere. They did everything in their power to aid people suffering from the effects of war; they were seen in places where no Monarch had ever before thought to visit.

One of our pictures to-day, for instance, shows the King visiting homes of the men in the barracks of Aldershot. He is seen chatting informally with the wife and children of one of the soldiers. In the other picture the Queen is at a sporting function at Southfields, Surrey. She stopped to talk to an injured war veteran.

During the war years and the years after the war, the work of the Queen amazed those who knew her intimately. She seemed never to tire; she was always ready and willing for any appearance or function; her vitality as unbounded. Never greatly interested in sport, she nevertheless was to be seen with the King at many sporting affairs, other than horse racing, to which the King was strongly attached.

Public Grows Safety Conscious Local Reo Distributor Says

Pioneering Work of Reo Followed by Other Car Builders

Ask ten motorists to list in order of importance the various features that, in their opinions, contribute most to the safety of motoring and you will find the answers give a pretty accurate picture of what automotive engineers will be building in years to come. This is the opinion of Leo Riggs of the Riggs' Motor Sales, local Reo distributor.

"With the number of persons killed or seriously injured in motor car accidents increasing year by year," Mr. Riggs says, "the public is becoming more safety conscious" and more thoughtful of those details of new cars that contribute to safety of operation. Persons who do most of their driving in the mountains might not all head their lists of wanted safety features with the same items that would be selected by persons who do most of their driving in flat country or by persons who drive chiefly in city traffic—but there are three items that will be among the first five on almost every list. They are: effective brakes, power when needed and ease of control.

Recent adoption by several more prominent motor car builders of two-shoe internal hydraulic brakes —the type pioneered by Reo in 1924 —is rather convincing evidence of public recognition of the type of brakes Reo owners have found so effective and safe. During recent years Reo engineers have made important contributions to the safety of motoring by pioneering several notable improvements in transmission design. Back in 1929 Reo gave the industry the incentive to improve transmissions when they pioneered "Silent-Second" the transmission which made the shifting of gears easy and certain, and which left the long accepted noise out of the driving in second speed.

Reo's more recent contribution, the automatic "Self-Shifter" introduced nearly three years ago, removes the dangers attendant upon shifting gears and the mental strain. Both hands are at all times free for steering and for signaling. When gears must be shifted, a touch on the accelerator is the signal for the "Self-Shifter" to do the work. Again, the removal of the conventional gearshift lever from the front compartment, together with the shifting of the parking brake lever to a convenient location well forward to the driver's left, make it easy for the driver to leave his car through the right hand door, instead of climbover out the left door into and into slippery pavement, or in front of approaching traffic."

Close Debate At Anytime

Toronto, April 9.—(CP)—Under the rules of the Ontario Legislature the Government could force a vote on the Hydro Power contracts issue which kept the Legislature in session all night but there was no indication today it intended doing so.

The rules provide, when second reading of a Bill is being discussed any member, who has the floor can move the vote be taken. It would be a simple matter for a government member to catch the Speaker's eye.

FIND BODY OF JOSEPH WALMSLEY

Drowned While Crossing Treacherous Ice Near Waupoos

Picton, April 9— (Special) — At 11.30 a.m. on Saturday, April 6th, the body of Joseph Walmsley, 50, was found near the shore off Philip Kellar's farm, at Waupoos East.

Mr. Walmsley had last been seen starting across the treacherous ice on foot from the mainland to Waupoos Island at 2 a.m. on Dec. 12th. Search for the body was then made, in spite of bad ice, and wind and snow, for several days, but no trace of the missing man could be found. The body was discovered some four miles from where Mr. Walmsley was believed drowned. It is thought the body was carried this distance with the breaking up of the ice in Smith's Bay.

Mr. Walmsley was born, and spent his entire life as a farmer on Waupoos Island. As a young man he attended the Picton Business College, but returned to farming after completing his business course. He is survived by his wife, before her marriage Miss Beerleigh of Woodrous, and a family of young children. Mr. James Walmsley of Picton is a brother and Mrs. Ostrander of South Bay a sister of the deceased.

The funeral was held in St. Mary Magdalene's Church on Monday at 2 p.m. with Rural Dean C. R. Whitley reading the burial service of the Anglican Church.

The large attendance at the funeral, and the profusion of flowers, expressed the sympathy of many friends over the fatality. Mrs. Percy Hart of Bellerille is a sister-in-law of the deceased.

Return to Farming Life Seen as Beneficial Factor

Dr. W. J. Black, C. N. R. Director Expresses Views

Winnipeg, April 9—"A great readjustment of population is taking place throughout Canada and the return of many families to farming occupation will, I am sure, have a beneficial effect upon unemployment conditions," stated Dr. W. J. Black, of Montreal, Director of Colonization and Agriculture for the Canadian National Railways, who arrived in Winnipeg yesterday from the West. Dr. Black will confer with Robert England and other officials before proceeding East.

"It is very interesting to point out," continued Dr. Black, "that the offices of our company in the Western Region handled close to five-thousand land enquiries in 1934. From these enquiries it has developed that 248 families from other parts of Canada, United States and drought areas were placed upon 171-929 acres of land. Our district offices also co-operated very closely with the Provincial Governments under the Dominion-Provincial subsidized back-to-the-land schemes.

"In the three Prairie Provinces 822 relief families in addition to the above were transferred from urban centres to farms, making a total of 1,797 families returned to the primary industry.

"During the last four years our Western offices located 5,857 families on over one million acres of land. This readjustment tends to effect a better balance between urban and rural population. When the country fully emerges from the present unsettled situation, instead of having these families on the lists of unemployed, they will be self-sustaining citizens.

"More than two-thousand men were placed in employment directly by our Western offices and it is interesting to note that in Western Ontario some 21 men placed originally in bush work, took up land in the Port Arthur district. A large percentage of single men placed in farm employment do not return to urban centres.

"Several new settlements were commenced in the Northern areas of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. These are off-shoots of various national and religious parents colonies whose younger generation is anxious to found farm homes for themselves.

"Good crops in parts of Western Canada and partially improved returns for farm products, reflected favorably on the demand for farm lands. However, the great majority of the prospective settlers have only a limited capital and it is therefore, essential to ensure their successful establishment at a minimum expense.

"There is a strong demand for authoritative information on available lands. To meet it, our department has completed a survey of the unoccupied lands in the Northern districts of the Prairie Provinces and is in an excellent position to advise prospective settlers," said Dr. Black.

AUTHORITY NOT VESTED IN HYDRO

Toronto, April 8 (CP)—Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn today said municipal consent or approval of future Hydro contracts would be dealt with during his speech on the bill in the legislature.

Secretary T. J. Hannigan of the Ontario Municipal Electric Association announced yesterday in Guelph letters were forwarded to the government and others interested seeking municipalities be represented on the Hydro Commission and the New Power Commission Act be amended with the provision no contracts for power on new developments be entered into without consent of the Hydro municipalities.

"The Hydro Electric Power Commission is not cloaked with authority to negotiate for power outside Ontario and pass this on in the way of power contracts," said Mr. Hepburn.

If Mirror Reveals Defects, It's Time to Improve Posture

Walk Correctly and Make it a Habit, Advises Expert

Spring fashions, of course, bring pilgrimages to dress shops. Carry them on, and find the final decision very exciting. There are feelings of rapture on the way home—with only one fly in the ointment. How long must your reversed, fitted Posture not what it should be. There's a lack of anatomical study. It is time for a new resolution: "I will stand better."

Every woman wants to carry herself beautifully. She looks with envious eyes at the Diana whose posture has lovely lines because carriage is perfect, posture correct. But she doesn't keep the subject in her mind. It goes slipping away from her.

Standing properly now and then won't enough. It must become a habit, as nature does breathing. Slumping, throwing the shoulders forward, and standing with the belly or the tummy flat will in time change the character of muscles. The human body is ever in the making, or unmaking. Walk like a queen, and you'll soon feel regal.

Directions for a ten-minute pick-up facial, to finish up the rushy hour and prettier for the evening date:

Wrap the finger wave in a head band. Bathe the face with soap and water, rinse with warm water—dry on hot moist compresses and dry gently.

Spread on a massage cream, starting at the chin bones, working upward. Give the face a brisk slapping, and then do a five-finger exercise, massaging with the finger tips. Go round and round the eyes with the little fingers very lightly. Stroke the neck up and down. Place the finger tips under the ears, sweep up to the crown.

Remove the cream with a dry cloth, then add a touch of astringent. On with the war paint!

SHANNONVILLE W. M. S.

The ladies of the Shannonville United Church W. M. S. held their monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. Robert McFarlane on Thursday afternoon, April 4th, with Mrs. Robert McFarlane, Group Leader in charge and Mrs. Mary Riley presiding at the piano. The meeting opened by singing hymn 208 and all repeating the Lord's prayer. The devotional leaflet entitled "Circle of Friendship" was read by Mrs. Phillip Knight and Mrs. (Rev.) Clark led in prayer. The minutes of the last meeting were read by the secretary and adopted.

Group leaders were asked by the president to remind the members of their group to make their donations for the bale early so it can be sent in on time.

Roll was then called by the secretary members responding by naming a foreign missionary and their missions. Mrs. George Pringle expressed thanks for the card sent when she was ill. All joined in singing part of hymn 190. Mrs. Charlie Liddle, peace secretary, gave a reading on "World Friendship" and Mrs. P. Knight gave a reading showing the good work the Travellers Aid Society is doing to aid young girls who are travelling alone. The rest of hymn 190 was sung. Mrs. (Rev.) W. S. Dix gave an interesting synopsis of the next chapter of the Study Book. Meeting closed by singing hymn 119 and all repeated the Mizpah Benediction.

The regular collection was over two dollars and thirty cents and the flower fund seventy seven cents, total collection three dollars and seven cents. Attendance was fourteen. Lunch was served by the hostess and her assistants and a very pleasant and social time enjoyed over the tea cups.

MELROSE W. M. S.

On Wednesday April 3rd. the ladies of the Melrose W. M. S. held a quilting at the home of Mrs. F. Bennett. There was a good attendance and at the usual dinner was served.

At 2 p. m. the president Mrs. E. Badgley called the meeting to order and opened with the hymn, "Jesus Calls Us O'er the Tumult" followed with prayer by Mrs. (Rev.) Clarke and all repeated the Lord's Prayer.

The President gave an Easter message.

Items of business were transacted and the minutes of the previous meeting were read by the Secretary and adopted and roll called.

The report of the W. M. S. Presbyterial which was held in Picton March 14th and 15th was given by the delegate Mrs. C. Haight. Meeting closed in the usual manner.

ST. ANDREW'S W. M. S.

On Wednesday, the 3rd inst, the members of St. Andrew's W.M.S. met in the lecture room of the church for the Thankoffering meeting.

The president, Mrs. James Fargey, occupied the chair and the guest-speaker was Mrs. Hunter, of Madoc, president of the Kingston Presbyterial.

Mrs. Haggerty and Mrs. Morrice ably conducted the devotional part of the service, following which the minutes of the previous meeting were read by Mrs. Peck, the secretary.

Mrs. Fargey also revealed the fact that a presentation would be celebrating a birthday that day, and congratulated Miss McMillan, whose natal day it was. Miss McMillan acknowledged the salutation briefly.

The treasurer's report was then read by Mrs. Ranson, and then the president introduced Mrs. Hunter as the audience.

Mrs. Hunter, who has spent many years in the foreign mission field, spoke interestingly and entertainingly of the work there seen through the eyes of a missionary, and related incidents connected with her own life and her daughter's work while they were missionaries in British Guiana and Trinidad. Fruits and goals and other gifts of a like nature, are the natives' idea of Thankoffering and these they gladly bring to the mission halls, always giving the best they have to offer.

Mrs. Alex Moore thanked Mrs. Hunter for the splendid address, and this was seconded by Mrs. W. J. Wales.

The ordinary business of the meeting was then resumed, and Mrs. Bateman read the "Current Events" paper which is a very popular feature, being a compilation of the most interesting items in the current number of Glad Tidings, and edited by Mrs. A. A. Reid and Miss Reid.

The closing hymn was then sung and the meeting dismissed by Mrs. Hunter.

Separate Invitations

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

If you were sending a wedding invitation to a family, and they had an engaged daughter, would you send her an individual invitation, one with a note asking her fiance to come also? I don't know the young man's name. How would you word such a note?

J.

Since you wish to invite the young man to the wedding, the best form would be for you to ask the young lady the name and address of her fiance, telling her that you would like to send him an invitation. Then address the invitation to him at his home.

First Dance

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. My thirteen year old daughter has joined a girls' organization and they are going to give a dance for a boys' organization of the same nature. As my daughter has never been to a dance, she would like to know if it would be proper for her to ask a boy from school, or church, to be her escort for the evening, as she knows no other boys. Also how should she go about asking him?

2. Please tell me what sort of dress would be appropriate for such an occasion? The girls and boys are between the ages of thirteen and twenty. I thought perhaps her a pretty afternoon dress of a light shade, not too elaborate, so that she can wear it to all sorts of affairs.

A.

B.

1. If each girl of this organization is asked to invite a boy as her guest, then it will be proper for your daughter to invite a boy from her school or her church, to be her partner for the evening. And it is certainly not "bad fashion" for a girl to have a partner-for-the-evening when she goes to a dance—and especially when she goes to her first dance! The best form is for your daughter to write the formal invitation to the boy whom she wishes to invite.

2. A simple frock, of a light, becoming shade, would be the most fortune dress for your daughter to wear.

TUXEDO

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Is it proper for a host whether it is improper for my young man friend to wear a business suit to a dinner dance to be held at a hotel, while I wear a formal black velvet gown? I do not like to be informal in dinner dress and cannot afford to be.

S.

The young man should wear a dinner jacket (Tuxedo) to the dinner dance. It would be inconsistent for him to wear a business suit when you are planning to wear an evening gown.

Marking the Linen

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I am a divorcee and I wish to embroider her initials. Must I use my maiden initial or my married initial, as I still use my married name, but expect to remarry very soon?

B.

Since you are to remarry very soon, don't use the initials of your present name. Under the circumstances, I suggest that you use the initials of your future name. That is, say your maiden name were Bella Smith, and you are to marry Henry Brown. Use the initials B S B.

INTRODUCTIONS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. When introduced to a man does a woman offer her hand?

2. When introduced to a woman, does a woman offer her hand? 3. Isn't it proper when friends drop in, for the woman of the house to remain seated and not rise when she does enter the room?

K. C.

1. When a man is introduced to a woman (a woman is not introduced to a man), she may, if she prefers, merely bow, or she may shake hands. In a casual introduction, usually the woman does not offer her hand. In any case the man should wait to see if the woman wishes to shake hands, should wait until she offers her hand.

2. Again in the usual introduction between friends, the two shake hands with each other. But they may if they wish do so.

3. Yes, the hostess always rises when she greets a guest, woman or man, and shakes hands with the guest. And when the guest leaves, the hostess again rises, and shakes hands with the departing guest.

4. When a man is introduced to a woman (remember, dear lady, that the man is introduced to the woman), the woman rises, if she prefers, but she is not required to do so.

5. Yes, when the hostess' mother enters the room to greet her daughter's guests, the guests should rise.

6. Yes, you would rise as your hostess enters a room.

7. And may I add one more suggestion? This is the correct form for your husband to address you, and to a person whom you wish to inform of your formal name—such as your letter to me.

Yours very sincerely,

Mary Brown Smith

(Mrs. John Brown)

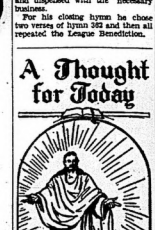
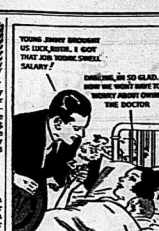
A Thought for Today



"Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."
—St. Matthew, 11:28.



KEEP your complexion rosy—softly sparkling, crystal clear. Difficult? Expensive? Not with this simple, refreshing "home" facial. Work up a rich, creamy lather using Lifebuoy—the deep-cleaning toilet soap that lathers so abundantly in hard or soft water, hot or cold. Massage it lather well into pores; then rinse. Do this nightly—see skin bloom with health.

Facts about "B.O."

Even on cool days we perspire a quart a day. We grow accustomed to this everyday odour—offend unknowingly. Fine that Lifebuoy regularly with Lifebuoy. Its purifying lather penetrates pores—stops "B.O." (body odour). Fresh, hygienic scent vanishes as you rinse.

A sheer lacy is an evening frock of crinkle weave and is a charming sort. It is in pale blue with neutron tone organdie collar and cuffs and panels on the skirt, the sash and for the double cape, which is removable. The cape is held in place by jet-set-nots and sweetheart roses in velvet.

Standing out from the wealth of pastels seen just now is the smart black dress. A clever evening frock of is black net posed over black satin. It has wide ruffles at the neckline and ruches at the knee-line and hemline.

Walk out in a smart new suit. A nice model is in yellow woolen crepe in fine ribbed stripe in brown. This is done in classic tailored lines, with a one-link jacket, and is worn with a brown top coat. When the top coat is not worn, brown accessories and furs go with this suit.

It isn't necessary to mortgage the homestead to buy a fur cape this year. The fur capelets and stoles are just as well handled and styled as the capes. The fur capelets are five but very smart is a five-tiered proletan cape in gray kidskin, which extends almost to the waist.

We call your attention to the neckline of even this simplest new dress, for this is where much of the style interest is focussed. A little frock of printed taffeta, white dots on brown, is a tailored model and yoke formed of rows and rows of white Valenciennes lace. The same treatment is accorded the cuffs of the short sleeves.

All points report the success of the simple...black suit with tailored touches. A typical model has a knee, collarless jacket and skirt, which are worn with a silver-strip-ed white taffeta blouse; huge bow fills in the collarless line.

Mrs. Mullen told of an enjoyable Afternoon Rednersville Mission Band had spent the previous Saturday afternoon with Mrs. (Dr.) Chute as guest speaker. ## BIG LEAGUE GOLD

By Jack Sords

By BILL BRAUCHER
Central Press Canadian Sports Editor

Since 1927, when the Pirates won the National League pennant, the club has been hitching along from one sorry each spring captioned "Oceans Seen Between Contenders".

The Pirates were sure to be tough. The team would run 1-2-3. But always some weakness cropped up to spoil pennant hopes. One year it would be bad pitching. Another year it would be the catching. The club always had too many left-handed batters and not enough right to cry for the privilege of pitching against the Buccaneers.

The Difference

Spike Years the bossing couldn't be talked more weaknesses cropped up as the Pirates might be expected to have.

Well, here's another spring and some of the same things might be written of the Pirates that have been set down in other years. The club still has too many left-handed batters and the catching still isn't anything to write home about.

This year there is this difference however. The club has improved in every department, particularly pitching, and in the person of Pie Traynor it has field leadership of the sort Pittsburg has not been favored with since Fred Clarke left 20 years ago.

Traynor's building of the team has not been spectacular but it has been good. Defence is better, there is an aggressive spirit that in other campaigns was sadly lacking, and trades have helped to give the club strength and balance.

Too Many Left-Handers

Taking up the weaknesses, the most striking concerns those left-handed batters. All the outfielders hit that way. Big Poison and Little Poison Waner, Babe Herman and Forest Jensen. Herman, of course, adds to the punch, as he hits southpaws pretty well, too.

Third Baseman Traynor, Second Baseman Harry Lavagetto and Shortstop Arky Vaughan are the only right-handed batsmen. Suhr at first is left-handed, as is Earl Grace, first string catcher. Tommy Thevenow, reserve infielder, bats right-handed, but his hitting is negligible. Last year, at second, third and short in 122 games, he hit .271.

It is in the pitching that most improvement is noted. Guy Bush and Jim Weaver, from the Cubs, round out the best staff the Pirates have had in years. Birkofer, a southpaw beginning his second year, is counted on for 15 games, he may pass that figure. Waite Hoyt, Red Lucas, Bill Swift, and Hal Smith are other hurlers.

COURT OF APPEAL

Before Mulock C. J. O. Middleton and Fisher

Wellington Marbelite Brick Co. Ltd. v. George F. Rutledge and Arthur R. Rutledge—Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of Kelly, J., Nov. 26, 1934, declaring that a forge was a hand blower, sand car, and anvil were not included in the mortgage security of the defendant, and that plaintiff was entitled to possession, and dismissing action in other respects. The defendants obtained a final order of foreclosure in respect of certain lands in the Village of Wellington, and plaintiffs allege that they had in possession of a brick making equipment valued at $50,000. In his reasons for judgment His Lordship said, inter alia:—"On a consideration of all the facts, and in view of the present state of the law and the authorities, I am of opinion that the machinery and equipment now in dispute are not goods and chattels but are included in the defendant's mortgage security as part thereof, and that therefore plaintiff's action must fail . . ." On appeal it was contended that the trial judge erred in finding that the articles in question were sufficiently annexed to the land and premises as to constitute fixtures. R. R. Nourse for plaintiff; C. A. Payne, K.C., for respondent. Judgment: Appeal allowed as to cuticle cylinders; otherwise dismissed; no costs of appeal.

NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, April 9.—(CP)—Another boost in the price of export copper on the New York market and higher prices for bar silver in London stiffened the tone of the Silver and Base Metal Shares on the Mining Section of the Toronto Exchange today, Noranda sold above the $36 mark and the smaller issues followed the upward trend. Senior golds held their ground while some of the secondary issues eased off 1 or 2 cents each. Trade in the yellow metals was slack.

Pioneer, selling at $11, up 50 cents was the only definitely strong spot in the Gold Group. It traded in good volume. Brazilians held a-gain of ten cents, while Wright Hargreaves closed unchanged and Teck Hughes and Kirkland were slightly soft.

Action was better in Hudson Bay and an advance of 35 cents to 13.75 was boarded. Sylvanite Silvers Cattle and Eldorado showed good action at price advances of 5 cents for the former and 2 cents for the latter. Nipissing and Bear exploration also were pricea a little higher.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, April 9 (CP)—Traders were on the sidelines today leaving the industrial section of the Toronto exchange with little to bother about, a few sales of Nickel, Imperial Oil and Loblaw A, went through the mill but business was decidedly thin over the board. Very few price changes were recorded.

Trades in Imperial were on a minor price recession while the other oil issues, International Petroleum and British American held unchanged and Model Pfd. advanced a half point. In the distillery group Distillers Seagrams and Industrial A were slightly higher and Walkers Common off 1-4 point. Brewery stocks remained dormant.

A state of inactivity in the Utilities was broken only by a fractional drop in Bell Telephone. Steel and commercials were recorded no changes and few sales in the miscellaneous. Imperial Tobacco and Beatty Pfd. both up 1-8, had the only price adjustments. Banks and loans were similarly sluggish. National Grocers Pfd dropped 4 3-4 to 121 1-4 and Canada Packers weakened 1-2 while other issues of the group held unchanged.

WALL STREET FINANCIAL

New York, April 9 (AP)—The stock market got back on its feet today, after yesterday's slight stumble, and once more began to show fresh speed advance.

Slight price changes appeared among shares of Canadian companies. Dome and International Nickel were each a shade higher, and Canadas ruled unchanged. On the curb, Lake Shore and Sttaan Walker both held about even. Dominion Government bonds were steady, and foreign funds improved 1-32 of a cent at 99 11-16.

While the activity was restricted in share transactions, one block of 25,000 was sold at 36 3-4, and Electric "A" came out at 8¼ off ⅛. This large sale apparently regained the ¼ on smaller dealings.

The metals were given a whirl with U. S. Steel opening up some three points, while American Smelting, Central De Kalb and Kennecott firmed fractionally to around a point.

NEW YORK CLOSE

New York, Apr. 9 (AP)—Stocks recovered today without any great difficulty from their moderate setback of yesterday. Metal issues were particularly firm, although quiet strength was manifested in other sections of the list.

U. S. Smelting got up some points and American Smelting and Cerro De Pasco were each a point or so higher. Canadas were unchanged to a point or more included American Telephone, Santa Fe, Union Pacific, N. Y. Central, Johns-Manville, Loew's, General Motors, Seaboard Oil, Standard Oil of New Jersey, Union Carbide and United Drug. The closing list was light and Ticker Transfers approximated 730,000 shares.

59 P.C. INCREASE IN POLICY SALES

Mutual Life of Canada Shows Expansion in First Quarter

The Mutual Life of Canada reports that the amount of new, paid for life insurance sold by the company during the first quarter of 1935 was 59 per cent greater than for the same period last year, and the number of policies sold was 52 per cent. in excess of the 1934 figure. # M. P. P'S. SLEEPY AFTER LONG HOURS

Members Sleepy.

Toronto, Apr. 9 (CP) — Sleepy members straggled back into the Ontario Legislature today after a brief breakfast recess and heard Leopold Macaulay, former minister of Highways, take up the opposition cudgels against the government's legislation to regulate power contracts with Quebec companies.

At ten o'clock the legislature had been in session for seven hours except for a two-hour dinner adjournment last night and a brief fast recess of an hour and 40 minutes.

Policy of the Premier in introducing for second reading his bill for terminating the Hydro contracts was at of "bitterness and stubbornness to the electors," said Mr. Macaulay. The former minister protested against the all-night session and the Premier's statement yesterday that House would sit all night if necessary to secure third reading of the bill.

"We're just up against a cantankerous Tory opposition," said Mr. Hepburn, when Mr. Macaulay read an article charging the Premier with dictatorship.

"The outstanding object of this bill is to hang something on the previous administration," Mr. Macaulay said.

With eight Conservative speakers still in the list to speak on the motion at noon today of a break in the opposition's ranks in the Ontario legislature against the government's legislation cancelling Quebec power contracts.

Seven of the seventeen Conservatives in the House were present at noon and another, Leopold Macaulay (York South), held the floor. He had been speaking for an hour, members returned from breakfast at 10 a.m.

Labor Shortage In Palestine Says Speaker

Y's Men last evening were given a real treat in the form of a talk by Mr. F. F. Grafton, of the local staff of the Modern Developments in Ancient Palestine. Mr. Grafton traced the various steps in the great change that has taken place with the establishment of the British Mandate and described the historical places of the Bible with the tremendous industrial progress of the country.

"Palestine," said Mr. Grafton, "has no shipping, no manufacturement, but rather a shortage of labor, and a surplus of capital." No natural harbors existing, large amounts of money have been spent in order to create harbors in Haifa, so that where a year or two ago, vessels had to anchor a mile or more from shore, they can now berth behind a breakwater, artificially made. Another striking feature of work is the building of a pipe line some 1200 miles to carry oil from Iraq to the sea which the speaker characterized as one of the greatest achievements of modern engineering. In various parts of its length, this great pipe rises as high as 2000 feet above sea level and drops down to 1320 feet below. Pumping stations have been established every 100 miles, around with communities have sprung up, including settlements.

Other great works which are rapidly changing the face of Palestine are Power stations, railway lines, paved roads and modern cities. In many cases upon the sites of the battlefields of the Old Testament. Tremendous crops are now being grown, being created by the export of Palestine oranges, which is also of interest to note, that ownership of the land remains with the Jewish people, who have been settled on long leases. In this way, a real national home is being created.

In closing, Mr. Grafton graphically described the changes around Jerusalem, where a sumptuous modern hotel, the King David, overlooks the ancient and ancient olive grove, and is faced with one of the finest Y.M.C.A. buildings in the world, with its welcome engraved over the entrance, to Christian, Jew and Mohamedan.

Thanks of the club for his splendid address, was voiced by Mel Blanchard, while Harry Pew wielded the fine box and Steve Licence the fine singing. During the evening, two fine vocal solos were rendered by Harold Howard, accompanied by Bert Houston.

Grading and standardization to be applied to the canning industry.

Direct shipment to packers should be worked for on the same rules of weighing, grading, price publication, etc., as to public yards.

"Set-off" charges should be based on a lower specific charge plus a percentage on the value of the stock sold.

Graded hogs should be graded and sold on grades. All live cattle should be graded before being exported to the United Kingdom.

A percentage of "cutter" and "canner" stock should be removed from the meat trade for fertilizer or tankage. Diseased cattle very old or unsound be banished from the market.

A Fisheries Control Board should be created to raise prices to producers, if possible, to eliminate misrepresentation of varieties of fish; to standardize qualities; to carry out complete inspectional activities in the industry; to eliminate cut-throat competition.

This problem, it is said, will be dealt with by the Federal Trade and Industry Commission. It is recommended that a Federal law be enacted providing for the incorporation of consumers' co-operatives.

Major recommendations are:

More complete organization of industry under employers' and trade associations.

More complete organization of workers in trade unions.

Better Government administration in all needs.

VILLAGE IS THREATENED

Saskatoon, April 9—(CP)— Fire of the business section of Herschell, a village of 300 people, is rapidly spreading towards the residential section, according to word received here by telephone.

Guardians of the Desert

By TOM GILL

But the gleaming, sun-baked desert gave no sign. and at last he found himself close to the rocky base of the Barrier where his best chance lay in some place or refuge to hold these lumpheaded foes at bay. Nearer and nearer it loomed, its face scarred and broken where workmen had blasted rock for the dam. Just ahead, freshly torn from that towering wall of stone, lay huge jagged boulders lay strewn about, and directly toward them Dick spurred his sweating, foaming horse. As he reached the tumbled mass he slipped quickly to the ground, looped the reins about the saddle horn, and giving his horse a resounding slap, sent it galloping away.

Whipping his automatic from its holster Dick stooped, and without looking back, darted into the way among the scattered rocks, forcing himself between them to the Barrier itself, squeezing at last into a deep, narrow crevice where, finally secure, for the moment, he turned and looked cautiously out.

From that rocky shelter his view was partially obscured. Only a strip of sandy, level and empty lay before him, and beyond that he caught through the shimmering heat waves the blue gleam of Amity Lake. He listened, but heard no sound. Mechanically he felt in his pocket, for cartridges and found only one extra clip. Well, he would waste no shots.

He waited, every nerve alert, patiently the wind blew. In hot, breathlike gusts about his hiding place, raising little puffs of white, powder-like dust that had settled there from recent blasting. Minutes passed.

He flattened back as voices came to him from near at hand. The sound drew closer, and peering cautiously from his cover a group of riders slowly filing by him, intently scanning every rock and crevice. While still in view the leader halted, pointing to Dick's tracks in the sand, and with one accord the men raised their eyes in the direction of his hiding place.

But it was one thing to find those telltale footprints and another to follow him with any comforting degree of safety, so for a time the little band of pursuers stopped to hold council. Not one of them but knew Jones' deadly skill with the revolver. Not one but knew the steel nerves, the calm and steady eye that awaited them behind that sheltering rocks. Swift death lurked behind those rocks, and no one man but one would dare face Sart's wrath if they failed to bring this chase to its final bloody end.

CHAPTER THIRTY-NINE

At length they seemed to reach agreement, the discounting each man handed the reins of his horse to one of their number, and dividing into three groups, they began deploying like an advance wave of sharpshooters along the base of the rock. Slowly they moved, almost fearfully, and not until long moments passed could Dick at last make out the sounds of their stealthy advance. They aimed directly in front of him a boot heel clinking against a boulder, and he knew that the first of his enemies was within close range. Kneeling behind a ledge of rocks he waited, cocked automatic in hand, until very fatality he heard the scuffling sound as of a body cautiously sliding over a rough surface.

Half rising, Dick took a short step forward, then impelled by some unheard and unthought warning, sprang back just as a bullet flattened with a vicious thud the massive rock not too feet before him. At the same moment a shot rang out, but to Dick's amazement the sound came from high above.

Again the hiss of lead, and another shot from above, and leaning far out Dick looked up to see on the Barrier's edge silhouetted against the sky, the dark outline of a man with drawn automatic peering down. Again the figure moved, seeking a clearer view, and once again the revolver raised, but this time Dick's own weapon spoke.

Deafeningly the shot crashed and re-echoed among the rocks, and even as Dick watched he saw the dark form above grow rigid, sway then slowly wheeling, fall far downward over the edge of the cliff. Twice in its long descent that clutching body turned in the air, twice it struck sickeningly upon jagged boulders just beneath his way and among his pursuers Dick heard a cry, of mingled fright and rage, and a man, bursting from his place of concealment, rose in full view running frantically for the open desert. It would have been an easy shot, but Dick only watched as then settled back, squatting in cow boy fashion on his heels while he slipped a fresh cartridge into the clip.

Immediate danger was over, but those shots from the Barrier's rim brought a new emergency to face for now Dick realized that Sart's men need only climb those heights to have him hopelessly at their mercy from above. He looked at the rocky wall behind him, the sheer face fresh with newly blasted stone, vainly searching for some crevice he might find safety from that overhead fire. Then, as his eyes rested there the, rapid galloping of horses told him that part of the band was already hurrying to gain the top of the Barrier while the rest held their captive in his narrow place of concealment.

He looked at his watch. A half hour more of security. By that time they would be directly above him, armed with high powered rifles, then a volley of shots, and the long pursuit would be done.

Strangely, he felt little emotion. He had done his best and lost. Reaching awkwardly in his pocket with his stiffening arm, he lighted a cigarette, and as he smoked his eyes scanned every foot of the cliff. Was there any way of climbing higher in search of a more protected refuge. But nothing met his gaze save a small ledge-like protrusion in the newly blasted rock, and slowly, painfully, he pulled himself upward but scarcely had his feet left the ground when, with a low rumble and a rattle of stones the fractured face of limestone fell away beneath his touch. Half blinded by dust and debris, Dick staggered back, and as the air cleared he caught sight of a small opening revealed by the crumbling stone.

With quickened pulse Dick kneeled and reached inside, but his groping hand touched nothing. Rapidly he kicked away the broken fragments, then dropping upon hands and knees, thrust his way into the blackness of that rocky hole.

Once more hope filled his breast. Here at least was protection from the peril that threatened from the Barrier's rim. He looked about him. No faintest ray of light. He listened. From outside muffled and distant voices were calling, as if at last his pursuers had cast aside all caution in their desperate effort to run him to earth. Reaching down, he picked up great handfuls of crumbling rock and threw them into the blasting, scattering it before the entrance to obliterate any tracks that might be left outside. Then carefully crushed the cigarette and thrust it in his pocket. Breathless he waited, but the voices came nit nearer, and at last died away.

Slowly the minutes passed and once the sound of renewed shouting came floating down to his hiding place, telling him the men had reached the top of the Barrier, and there in the darkness he smiled. They would find nothing from up there, and in this secluded hiding place he could hold out against a thousand—at least for a time.

Darkness, still hours away, was his only chance.

Cramped in every muscle from his strained position, Dick edged his way further back, and with a sudden shock that his groping hands would encounter no wall at his rear. Turning after but to his surprise the place seemed to open out larger, until now he could stand upright, and at last reaching out with widespread arms, he found no walls. Faintly, as he stood there, he felt a cool draft moving about him, coming not from the entrance but from the direction of the blackness beyond and lighting a match, Dick looked down upon the smooth stone floor of a flume leading directly into the very heart of the Barrier. Again that cool, elusive current of air brushed by him, and when the match burned out he peered about, expecting to find some faint gleam of light from above, but only inky darkness and utter silence encompassed him.

Reaching in his pocket Dick drew forth a cigarette lighted and beneath its dim illumination he advanced along this strange rocky corridor that neither curved nor rose, but held its straight, level way into the blackness. Twice he passed his hand over the walls, certain that so straight a passageway must be man made, but its utter smoothness, its lack of any sign of workmen's tools voided that possibility. The work of nature itself had hollowed out this ten den secretly through the long centuries discovered only by chance and brought to light by the blasting on the face of the Barrier.

On he went, twice that current of air extinguished the tiny flame, but always, straight ahead, the story passageway, led endlessly without rise or fall, until Dick estimated from his paces he had gone well over a quarter of a mile. The air, too, seemed fresher here, moving by him with even greater insistence, and at last, far in the distance, a tiny shaft of light stood out no larger than a star. Above him the darkness faded, as if representing this disturbance of their starkness recoiled.

Toward that gleaming, far off illumination, Dick hastened, but again the passage narrowed rapidly, until at last he forced his way with difficulty ever nearer the mysterious source of light that widened as he drew closer, and seemed to flicker and change in slow but constant rhythm. But nothing but the forward then stopped with an involuntary exclamation of surprise. Right before him, framed in a small setting in the rock, its flickering motion caused by a dense growth of shapeless leaves moved ceaselessly in the wind outside.

Crawling forward, Dick pushed on, head first, through the narrow entrance, and brushing past the thicket of chaparral, gazed curiously up about him. His amazement he stood again at the base of the Barrier this time looking forth not upon the foothills of Sierra and Azure Lake, but out across the desert over miles of cactus and glistening sand toward the low mountains of Mexico. He had passed through the Barrier itself!

Wonderingly he stared back at the hidden entrance, half covered with crumbling, rotting rock, looking more like the inconspicuous lair of some desert wild thing than a mouth to his great subterranean tunnel through the living rock.

And suddenly, like a blazing thunderbolt, the vital significance of this discovery burst upon him, driving away both fear of pursuit and that aching pain in his shoulder, bringing to his cheeks a flush of wild exultation. For here, carved by nature itself, was the very passageway—the passageway—to lead the waiters of Azure Lake past the Barrier and out to the desert. Here at last the impossible had come to pass and the old, old dream of the Verde ranchers might be realized.

CHAPTER FORTY

Dick's weary eyes were bright with excitement. "It's our chance—our everlasting chance!" he cried aloud. It is a low, exultant voice.

He wanted to shout, to run, to hurry on and tell Barnes. Half his plans were already be arranging to run riot in his brain, for Wing Lee there was a way of using final way of checkmating Sart's scheme. But resolutely he forced himself to be calm and he made his way reluctantly back into the narrow crevice, not even pausing for the luxury of a cigarette until far enough inside to be sure the glare or smoke could not betray his hiding place.

Almost twelve o'clock. The very thought of waiting until darkness was intolerable, yet Lowell's cooler judgment told him there was no other way. He tried to doze, but pain and his racing thoughts kept sleep at bay. Interminably the hours dragged, and into by him the glare owa before the entrance lengthened. Once Dick heard the hum of a plane flying low over the Barrier, and he smiled quietly in the dim obscurity of his hiding place. Sart's scouts would have little chance to sight him from the air. He settled back, waiting, waiting.

The first gaunts of night wind were blowing when at last Dick left his cavern to trudge the weary desert miles to Barnes' hacienda. Watchfully through the night's purple shadows he scanned the far horizon but in the gathering darkness no sign of life was visible. His shoulder had ceased bleeding, but every movement brought pain, and even before an hour passed he was shivering and dog tired. Despite the sudden coolness of the desert evening, beads of perspiration stood out upon his forehead, and at last Dick ceased to be but he trudged doggedly on. For a while, changing upon a well worn now trail, he made better time, for the sand was packed harder and he found a little easier. Later—it seemed hours later—Dick stopped to rest and smoke, crouching at the base of the Barrier that stretched upward to be lost in the blackness of night. Once more he started, rapidly now—he left the Barrier behind—and finally the Verde road lay at his left, knowing that within hour he would be at Barnes' hacienda, and Jane leading to the Barnes' hacienda.

Painfully and with shortened steps, he struggled on, endlessly repeating to himself the words he tried to keep his arm at rest to ease the sharp, aching pain, but now and now to spread from the shoulder to his very heart. His throat smarted with alkali, and stooping once he put a pebble in his mouth to lessen the thirst that had tortured him since nightfall. Once he staggered. The night had become unreal—a fantastic, pain-wrecked dream.

When at last he stumbled upon the lane, Dick never remembered but the sight of a lighted window in the Barnes home brought him back to full consciousness.

There, before a crackling fire of mesquite, Bess Winthrop, still clad still in her riding clothes of the morning, paced frantically the long room. Once, although Dick made no sound, it was as if the girl instinctively sensed his approach for she looked up toward the door, listened intently, then remained in silence pacing and as she turned Dick saw her cheeks were wet with tears.

Weakly, steadying himself against the railing, he climbed the steps, and with his uninjured arm raised the old familiar tattoo that these three had used in childhood days, then, done and unutterably weary leaned his hot, wet head against the door.

Inside, with a glad cry the girl sprang forward and Dick with open the door to see in the lamplight Dick fall from Solar forward. Her face went ashen, and throwing both arms about his waist she held him until Barnes carried him to a chair. But the spell of weakness was only momentary, and as Lowell men Dick opened his eyes and was smiling up at them.

Assuringly he shook his head as the girl's frightened eyes fell to the bloodstained bandage. "It's nothing," he told her, "Let's not talk about that, for I've come back safe and both of you."

His lungs seemed to have swollen, and smiling a ghost of his old smile at Nora he added, "But I can't help feeling a bit like the Arabian gallions of waiter, 'There's nothing in my veins but sand, sand."

Child Should Form Habits While Young

By LISA GRENELLE

Louise had a doll, Matilda, for whom she had a great affection. Everywhere Louise went, Matilda went, too, carted about by the end of an arm or leg. She did this until mother explained to Louise that this method of transportation was not agreeable to Matilda. It gave her a headache, mother said, and made her quite dizzy.

Mother taught Louise how to carry Matilda as if she were a real baby. She taught her how to dress Matilda as baby should be dressed and how important it was for Matilda to go to bed early and lie down for a short time after lunch. Matilda was getting pale, mother thought, because she did not get enough fresh air and sunshine.

Louise learned it all. Matilda's regime was sometimes a nuisance, of course, but mother said that was the only way to bring up a real baby. And Matilda was a real baby. Louise would never admit otherwise.

Make-Believe World

All children, when they are very small, live in a make-believe world with their toys. A doll, a teddy bear, a toy donkey or a character out of a story book is more real and sometimes dearer to them than real people.

Adults are so very large and strong and they speak in a strange language. At least it amounts to a strange language because the meaning of so many of the words are not clear. The words "don't" and "don't" and other rules are incomprehensible enough to the average small child.

So the child retreats into his own world, where he does not feel so small and helpless. There he is a make-believe life where grown-ups do not interfere with the things he wishes come true. He is all powerful and rules, as parent, soldier or king.

All of which is natural and charming, as it should be, but the child's faithful to his fairyland. But don't let him waste time.

They are far too important, these first impressionable years, to waste. A child's formed now are so often permanent.

Necessary Preparations

The child, at this early period, needs his daily preparation for the escape from the confusing and over-powering grown-up world. But he needs also his daily installation for the transference into reality, when the time must be before very long.

Even more in these baby years, in his make-believe world, a child must be taught to live up to his responsibilities. Jane, for example, herself the mother of Matilda, she must learn to be a considerate mother.

If Jimmie declares himself soldier or king, he must live up to his make- believe office—a soldier must be brave. He must obey without question. A king must be just. He must be responsible for the lives and the well-being of his subjects.

A china doll cannot really suffer from her inattentive mother's neglect. But her mistress' character suffers and later real children may suffer from such irresponsible habits.

A WORD ABOUT RICE KRISPIES from W. K. KELLOGG

OFTEN the introduction of a new product benefits many phases of Canadian life. This has been our experience with Kellogg's Rice Krispies.

The success of Rice Krispies has opened a large new market for the Canadian farmer.

We had a double objective in developing Rice Krispies. First, to create a delicious cereal that would appeal to every one. Second, to help mothers in their task of getting children to take sufficient milk. It was thought that a different type of cereal—one that would snap, crackle, and pop when milk or cream was poured into the bowl—would stimulate appetites.

This was true. Today, people of all ages are enjoying Rice Krispies. The convenience of serving this ready-to-eat cereal has resulted in shorter hours for mothers—less time spent in the kitchen—more moments of leisure.

Canadian industry also benefits. Thousands of people are kept busily employed in the manufacture and marketing of Kellogg Cereals.

We are pleased that Rice Krispies have added a tempting new ready-to-eat cereal to the Canadian table, and have delighted millions of mothers and children. We are particularly happy that this has helped thousands of people to have better jobs, and to enjoy life more.

HIGH MENTAL POWER IS NOT TRUE GENIUS

Superior Gifts of Mind Often Confused With Genius

(By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D.)
Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright 1935, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

In popular concept a genius is an individual who possesses exceptional creative ability. This is true, but it does not define it. A more exact definition is too elastic—it covers too wide a range of possibilities.

Genius was a gift of the mind, is rare! There are probably not more than a dozen or two true geniuses in the whole world today! Superior mental ability may simulate genius but is not to be confused with genius. Talent, although it may produce remarkable results in the novel way, is generally more or less limited. Something along lines already laid down by a plodding and certain manner.

Genius, on the other hand, is bold. It flashes and flares. It has no precedent. It strikes out for itself in search of the unknown!

Genius produces a solution or creates something entirely new. It ceases of reasoning and imagination that arises from the beaten path. Genius arriving by short-cuts, scarcely seen where it gets there!

The genius is not only a creative artist, he is an artist of the very highest type. Within his mind he fashions a world quite alien to that which he lives.

These phantasies he projects in a daring original way. Whatever he accomplishes is different from anything else in the commonly done, and, usually, as it has been said before. It is peculiar and distinctive. It is himself alone.

The question is often raised whether Shakespeare was a genius. Shakespeare was certainly a genius. He was a shrewd, level-headed, practical business man, whose writing was his profession. He put his plots, dialogue, writing, science or invention—for the benefit of others. The golden gifts beslowed upon them.

In true genius all the faculties are working in accord. Some may be more highly developed than others, but none is deficient. Genius that deserves the name is well-rounded and effective.

Without genius we would never be as far advanced as we are today.

DR. BISCH'S DAILY DIET HINT

Although it is desirable to add roughage to the daily diet in the form of vegetables containing more by leaves and stems, there is no question but that such more or less indigestible foods can be taken in excessive amounts.

When this is done, the roughage instead of stimulating the muscular action of the intestines does just the contrary. In other words, the intestines, being over-stimulated, contract their muscular walls and constipation is produced instead of overcome.

Montreal Royals Defeat Halifax Wolverines 4-3

Need Only Win or Tie To Go Into The Finals

By GEO. C. MURRAY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Halifax, April 9 (CP)—Montreal Royals were within shooting distance of the Allan Cup finals today having defeated Halifax Wolverines 4-3 last night in the second game of the Eastern Canadian Amateur Hockey Championship series after holding them to a 3-3 count-time tie in the opening encounter. counter.

Either a win or a draw in Wednesday night's battle will qualify Royals to meet Port Arthur Bearcats for the Canadian title and the cup Montreal Hawks abandoned to go into a commercial league.

The Bearcats, Western champions, arrived in the city last night and saw the last period between Royals and Wolverines.

One goal down and fighting desperately to close the gap, the Maritime champions then had the invaders hobbled on their own Montreal blue line in an attack that moved Lester Patrick to consternation for the first time since he arrived to look for big league prospects.

"The Wolves should even up the series on Wednesday night." The gray-haired coach of the New York Rangers said after it was all over. "And then I expect to see them eliminate the Royals from Allan Cup competition in the deciding game."

DAVE TROTTIER QUESTION MARK OF THIRD GAME

May Not be Able to Play Due to Injured Leg

BOLL WILL PLAY

Leafs Determined to Force Series Into Four Games

By H. M. PETERS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Montreal, April 9 (CP)—Condition of Dave Trottier, stanch left winger, was the question mark in the camp today as Montreal Maroons laid plans for the game tonight that may bring them the thrill for which the club and its supporters have waited nine years—a Stanley Cup victory.

Closer to the cup than they have been since they won it in 1926, the club's second year in the National Hockey League, Maroons are two games up on the powerful Toronto Maple Leafs after 3-2 and 3-1 wins in Toronto. Tommy Gorman's speedy red team can end the series with a victory over the determined Toronto outfit. Manager Conny Smythe led grimly into town this morning.

While hockey-mad fans nursed tickets for another night of sitting and standing room, Maroons were eagerly waiting the result of Trottier's first attempt to skate since his right thigh was cut Saturday in the second game of the series.

Gorman was confident the stiffness could be worked out in time and his best scoring line of Russell Blinco, Earl Robinson and Trottier would be ready.

Toronto won all three games against Maroons here during the regular National League season and had a little more luck against Alex Connell's brilliant goaltending than they had Saturday. Toronto attempted to relieve Connell of the fourth game here Thursday. Should the Leafs also win this one the issue would return to Toronto for the fifth and deciding game on Saturday.

The bookies would establish no favorites for tonight. Their offer was 6-5 and pick your own team. But they offered the huge odds of 8-1 Maroons would win the world's championship.

Advance word from Toronto indicated Smythe would dress Hunt Boll as utility player, leaving Andy Blair in civies. Blair was used in the Second Toronto game and Boll in the first.

Maroons' line-up depended largely upon Trottier's condition. If he can play then Dave Kerr will be moved from the third to the second line with Sammy McManus taking Cully Dahlstrom's place beside Bob Gracie and Gus Marker. Bill Miller will again be utility man.

Leafs Have Possibilities Despite Loss of Star Players

Ike Boone Coming North With A Real Ball Club

TORONTO, April 9.—(CP)—Although losing the backbone of a fighting ball club by the departure of several stars to the Major League fields, Toronto Maple Leafs seem to have virtually the same pennant possibilities they had a year ago, when they finished third in the regular International League season and then won the playoffs.

Pitchers Gene Schott and Al Hollingsworth, first baseman George McQuinn, Second Baseman Walter Mowrisey and Shortstop Nolen Richardson all are gone from last year's ensemble. Some of these, however, may come back to the Leafs and Manager Ike Boone is not worrying over his present lack of experienced material.

Boone, the League's champion batsman, expects help from Cincinnati Reds but in the meantime he's fairly well satisfied with his outfield consisting of Wes Schulmerich and Tom Oliver, both with Major League experience, and Boone himself.

For his infield, Boone has Frank McCormick from Wilmington, N.C., a good hitter, Ken Smith, utility infielder last season, and Ossie Stanley, another Wilmington product. McCormick probably will get the call at first and Staylor may last at second.

If Morrissey fails to stick with the Reds, Boone hopes to get him back to fill in at shortstop, leaving Cal Chapman, recruit from Memphis, at third and Smith again in reserve. Chapman's training was retarded by a sprained ankle but Boone has faith in the youngster's fielding ability.

Stan Lucas, Walter Hilcher and Jimmy Pattison look like three excellent bets for starting pitching duty and Bill Barnes, submarine hurler from the Piedmont League, also may be called upon for regular duty. Boone's chief worries revolve about his pitching staff but he expects to get adequate help from the Reds before the season starts.

Jack Crouch is the only experienced catcher Boone has on hand but there too the Reds may come to Boone's rescue.

DEPRESSION IS OVER FOR BAER

Receives Many Flattering Offers For Defence of Title

NEW YORK, April 9.—(CP)—Exactly half the offers he has received for a title defence in recent weeks are bonafide, the depression is over for Max Baer.

The heavyweight champion and his partner, Anell Hoffman, jointly are exercising their brains over a bewildering variety of proposals all of them promising rich returns. The list reads something like this:

1—A title fight in London, Rome or Berlin, against Max Schmeling with Waltz Rothenberg doing the promoting. Rothenberg mentions a guarantee of $300,000 for the champion.

2—A title fight in London against Schmeling for a British Syndicate, represented by Commander Tex Rickard, promoter. (Guarantee $250,000).

3—A title fight in England against Schmeling for a Blackpool syndicate, represented by Hoffman.

4—A title fight here in September for Madison Square Garden Bowl Corporation with Jack Dempsey Club with either Joe Louis, Primo Carnera, or Tuffy Griffiths, in the other corner, depending on the whim of the two wins their June match.

5—A title fight under the auspices of Madison Square Garden in June, probably against Max Schmeling but which may return the parties involved enough coffee and cake money to keep them from starvation awhile.

SUDBURY CUBS IMPRESS FANS

Juniors Ready For Opening Tilt in Finals For Memorial Cup

Winnipeg, April 9 (CP)—With an enthusiasm that presaged a warm time for their opponents, Sudbury Cub Wolves, Eastern champions, and Winnipeg Monarchs, Western finalists, sharpened up on their respective positions today in preparation for last night's opening game in the Dominion title-series for the Memorial Cup.

Appetites of fans were whetted by the memory of a stirring series played three years ago when Sudbury, after losing the first game to Monarchs, came back to win the three remaining two and the Memorial Cup. There will be new faces on the lineups this year but the competition promises to equal that of 1932.

Fans were deeply impressed with the form displayed by Wolves in their brief workouts. Davie Kemp, in goal, "Chuck" Shannon on defence and Ab Conick and Art Stuart on the forward line played their respective positions with the nonchalance of veterans.

Max Silverman, wide-awake coach of the Sudbury Juniors, refrained from comment beyond stating his charges were in the proverbial pink. The task that Max built for the Dominion classic appeared heavier and faster when Monarchs as they wound up their series of training.

Monarchs, whose gruelling three-game series with Saskatoon Wesleys, for the Western Junior title, put them right on edge, confined their workout to light skating practice. All appeared in excellent condition for the two-out-of-three game inter-sectional series.

KILREA BROS. ON WAY HOME

Thinks Leafs Should Have Won and That Connell Was Lucky

Art and Ken Kilrea, brothers of Hec Kilrea Toronto Maple Leaf hockey star passed through the city yesterday. They were en route home to Ottawa after having attended the Toronto Maple Leaf-Montreal Maroon play-off games held on Toronto Saturday evening.

Both agreed that it was a good game but both lamented the fact, that Toronto lost. They were loud in their praise of "Busher" Jackson, but particular mention was made of Alec Ostbroh star goal tender of the Montreal Maroons. Alec sure had a horse shoe and rabbit's foot on him Saturday", said Art. They admitted, that the Toronto team were in a tight place but they haven't given up hope that Conny Smythe's team will yet take the cup. Art Kilrea is only fifteen and he played this year on the team, that won the Ottawa Juniors for the championship of Ottawa. No less authority than Cy Gill commented that Ken would be even better than Hec. Hec has admitted as much himself.

OLYMPICS EVEN SERIES IN WEST

Punch Home 4-0 Win Over Vancouver And Much The Best

Vancouver, April 9 (CP)—Detroit Olympics of the International Hockey League were back on an even footing with Vancouver Lions also in their "little world series" after defeating the Northwestern Hockey League champions 4-0 in the second game here last night.

Lions took the first Friday night 5-1, and the third of the five game series will be played Wednesday night.

Olympics counted single goals in the first and second periods, then punched home two in the final session as they caught the Lions flatfooted twice on power plays.

Despite the fact Olympics were handed seven penalties, five of them in the last period, compared with a lone two minutes for Brian Hextall, Lions' winger, the coast club was unable to take advantage of their extra manpower.

The few times they broke through a tight Detroit defence they were stopped dead by Normie Smith, who played a brilliant game in the visitors' goal.

GENE SARAZEN WINS TOURNEY

Attributes Success to Moving Back to Simple Life

(By Alan Gould)

(Associated Press Sports Editor)

Augusta, Ga., April 9.—(AP) — Gene Sarazen has found a new secret for golfing success and for proof he can point today to his sensational triumph in the Augusta National Go" Club's second annual invitation tournament.

Gene attributes the recovery of winning form after a lapse of nearly two years to the fact he has exchanged the social demands of city life for the travelling for the tranquility of a farm in the East Brookfield, Conn., area.

"I never bit the ball better in r life," said Sarazen.

"I feel more confident of my shots than at any time since I won the British and American open championships in 1932.

"I'm going right back to the farm, to keep in shape. I'll be up with the roosters every morning from now on, running a mile before breakfast to improve my endurance."

These who stayed to the finish of the battle of Augusta to see Sarazen conquer blonde Craig Wood of Deal, N.J., by five strokes in their 36-hole play-off, 144 to 149, are convinced Sarazen is entitled to the rounds of tournament play he was six under par.

In practice beforehand he was it under par four rounds. His shotmaking was machine-like in its accuracy and consistency.

DAY BY DAY

All roads lead to the local Armouries for the gala Golden Gloves boxing contests tonight. Only one change in the proposed program was necessary, that being the addition of a heavyweight bout in place of the advertised light heavyweight go. When final weights were announced today it was found that both Gilmour of Trenton and Terry Bentley of Napanee weighed over the 175 pound limit. Bentley scaled the stars at 183, while Gilmour went five pounds higher. The heavyweight division has been scheduled as the high-light bout of the evening. There have been some mighty lightweight tile their entry forms with Promoter Clem Allen and a good elimination series can be looked for in this class which incidently will provide at least three bouts. Tickets, we enjoy, are on sale at the sporting goods store in Belleville.

The Aajmaa Club of Belleville was officially admitted into the Northern Division of the Canadian Canoe Association at their annual meeting held at Ottawa over the week end. Wm. A. "Bill" Fry of this city represented the Aajmaa Club Stripes and the local entry was received with open arms. It is the first time Belleville has ever been officially connected with canoe activities in recent years, and our first venture into the C.A.C. is due to through the efforts of Mr. Fry, that local aquatic-minded sport fans were afforded a visit from the Ganaoque Canoe Club last summer during the Centennial Celebration. The showing of the paddlers from Belleville left a favorable impression and did much to cultivate interest in local paddling circles. Mr. Fry predicts a Central Ontario Canoe branch before many years, embracing Belleville, Trenton, Colborne, Port Hope and possibly Peterboro. At least a foundation has been established locally and with the acquisition of two racing shells for beginners increased interest is being shown locally. The Aajmaa Club has a single shell and a four as its disposal.

Carl Gruber, ex-member of the Island Aquatic Canoe Club in Toronto, is now a resident of Belleville and has offered to come out and coach the younger and inexperienced Belleville youths, who are today keenly interested in paddling. Carl Gruber was a member of the doubles in win that event at the British Empire games in Hamilton in 1930. Gruber was on the winning doubles for the championship of the Canadian Canoe Association in 1930, 31, and 32, while in 1934 he and his partner won the international doubles. This year Carl intends paddling single for the Aajmaas. Efforts are also being made to interest Doug Powers into returning to the sport, he being a previous member of the New Edinburgh Club of Ottawa. With the S.E.A.C. sponsoring yachting and paddling this year the Aajmaas introducing paddling rejuvenated interest in aquatic sports is looked for in Belleville henceforth.

Sergeant Major Wibberly informs us that three all-star amateur wrestling bouts will be presented at the Airport R. P. No. 29 on Thursday night featuring a bout between Phil Lawson and Jimmy Allen, both of Toronto. Allen is the present Dominion lightweight wrestling champion, having wrested same from Edwin Lawson some months ago. Lawson is out to regain his lost laurels, the promoters say.

The local sponsors of the city basketball championships announced today, that a sudden death game between Deacon A.C. and the Y. M. C. A. squad would be played at the Collegiate on Friday night. The winner of this sudden death tilt will be awarded the city cage honors. In addition to the city final game the two boys' collegiate squads, the Collegiate and the senior collegiate will clash for the "student" basketball title.

A few statistical figures in relationship to the financial status of the past year's activities of the O.R.A.A. were presented last Saturday. For instance the O.R.A.A. derived an income of $2,367.19 from all play-downs. The intermediate "A" series proved the first profitic to the association. The total receipts from all series was $6,04 leaving $484.54; intermediate "B $628.79; intermediate "B1" $99.75; intermediate "B2" $280.2 This may seem like a tremendous amount to be taken in, but for the information of the ordinary fan we might point out that the organization spent nearly one-third of that amount on the minor series and intend spending more money on juvenile and junior baseball in the future.

Information comes from Boston to state that Dave Komonen, Canada's star marathon runner, would defend his laurels in the Boston marathon on April 19th. Some 80 entries have already been received, with Cec Chase of North Sydney, N.S. and Ollie Beamont of Toronto being other Canadian entries. Komonen won every marathon of importance on the continent last season.

Conny Smythe and Coach Dick Irwin have summoned all their farm help in from Syracuse and included them in the Maple Leaf party that passed through the city early this morning. The third game of the Stanley Cup championships is slated to be played at the Montreal Forum and the result of which will be announced at the Golden Gloves boxing tournament at the local armouries.

In financial reference to the N. H. L. play-offs to date Eddie Allen, sports editor of the Toronto Mail and Empire, has compiled some startling figures, which read:

"The 12 games that have been played so far in the National League and Stanley Cup series have attracted some 174,800 spectators most of this number 56,700 have attended the four games at the Maple Leaf Gardens, two against the Bruins and the same number against Maroons. The Boston games outdrew those against the Maroons by 1,394. The first game with the Bruins brought out 14,213, while the Saturday night engagement attracted the second largest pro hockey attendance in the history of the Gardens, 14,850. The Maroons drew 13,511 on Thursday and 14,157 on Saturday, a total of 27,668 against 29,062 for Boston.

The financial returns are not available, but according to reliable information each of the net gates was about $18,500, a total of $74,000. In addition, the Ontario Government, through the Ontario Athletic Commission assessment and the amusement tax has netted over $8,000 from the four games."

"PRESS AGENT"

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

He was short and round and his face had the correct appearance of an apple. He smiled with a half-ingratiating, half-puckish parting of lips above which a slightly vile little blond moustache hovered. His blue eyes peered genially behind glasses. Pate had cast his as a press agent.

Betty Burns, the featured dancer of the Paranoiac Club, who had an imagination as vivid as the movements of her curious legs, looked at him with a humorous twinkle in her fetching, blue eyes:

"All you need," she remarked, "is a bow and arrow and you could pass as Cupid."

"Great stuff," he laughed. "Great stuff. That gives me an idea," Betty Burns, who knew well how he could work an idea, looked and waited.

"I have been looking only an hour ago at a picture of Bob Douglas. A great guy—this Douglas."

"Who is Douglas?" asked Betty.

"Great guns," cried her press booster, "you don't know Douglas? He just broke half a dozen track records."

"So what?" retorted Betty, "can he kick as high as his shoulders?"

"So what?" cried her press agent, "you're still asking. Didn't you just shatter something about Cupid! So you're engaged to him, kid. You've been doing the town with him. You're crazy about each other. Boy, will that make the papers! Everyone will be talking about you."

"I think you're nuts," said Betty.

Three days later Bob Douglas stepped into the locker room and was astounded by a reception. Every members of the track team was there waving a paper under his nose.

"What's the idea," Bob asked innocently, "growing intellectual? You'll be thrown off the team if someone hears you can read."

Laughs and jeers greeted his ability. One of the boys jumped on a shed and turning the pages till he reached a Broadway column, began to declaim:

"Betty Burns, the high kicker, and Bob Douglas, the fast runner, can't see the road ahead because of that certain feeling."

Congratulations!

In the next moment, all the boys had surrounded him and were pulling his hand in congratulation and thrashing him lustily on the back.

A waiter of customers followed:

"Is she hot lookin', Bob? Can she cook? Does she eat spaghetti once? How long have you known her? What's the idea of biting out on us?"

Bob shook off his tormentors. "Honestly, you're all nuts," he cried, "I never met the dame."

A chorused laughter greeted his remark. Finally one of them sallied: "Well, then you ought to meet your sweetheart. She may be in Canada at that."

"I'll meet her all right," snarled Bob, "and give her plenty."

The chorus disappeared behind the wings and Bob motioned to the waiter. He scribbled his name on a sheet of paper. He asked the waiter to hand it to Miss Burns with the request that she come out and greet him. Within a few minutes she was there.

Bob looked her over cautiously. The eyes were a bit lively and playful. The hair had that bold and shiny sheen of platinum. But her smile was sweet and genial. She greeted him and her voice purred softly and soothingly.

"I feel awfully embarrassed," she remarked, "wasn't it awful for that ridiculous to say those things about us?"

Bob gallantly brushed the subject aside. "Looking at you," he said, "I'm not at all sorry. Perhaps, it's fate."

"That sounds a bit trite," said Betty, "but honestly I have been half in love with you ever since I saw your pictures in the papers when you broke all those records."

"Perhaps," said Bob clumsily, "he was guessing at my thoughts before I even thought them."

"You know," said Betty, "we really have a lot in common. To start with—we're each specialists with our legs."

Before the hour was over, Betty and Bob had begun to feel genuinely that the columnist had grasped pretty close to the truth. Thereafter Bob frequented the Paranoiac Club often, got into the habit of seeing Betty home and gradually got to meeting her outside the club.

In short out of the whim of a press agent—love blossomed.

Three short months later, Betty Burns sat on the couch in Bob's apartment, swinging them back and forth. Close by stood her press agent. The columnist had grown weary of willing about her romance with Douglas and he was trying desperately to think of something new. After all a press agent must get his clients talked about or he has no clients.

A New Idea

"Hitting the way you are," said her press counsellor, "gives me an idea," Betty Burns, who knew well how he could twist ideas inside out, waited.

"Skip news," he continued. "Crossed legs and skip news. The Baron Von Bonsowski is arriving on the Olympic. Well, he's coming here because he's in love with you. You had finally cabled him that you are ready to say 'yes.' Boy, that will be a pipe to put over."

"You're nuts," said Betty Burns, "how do you pronounce his name?"

Rage bloodshot and hands shaking, Bob stormed into the corridor adjoining the dressing room of the Paranoiac Club. He waved a newspaper under Betty's nose.

"What's the idea," he yelled, "the baron so-and-so. Were you just playing a game with me? How long have you known this baron?"

Betty's gay, blue eyes twinkled. "My dear," she said, "I can't even pronounce his name. That's your press-agent doing the same thing he did . . . with you."

Bob was non-plussed for a minute then a sudden thought struck him. "Yes," he shouted, "and you know what happened to me. I suppose, now it will be the baron's turn. You'll meet him and make good with your press agent's word."

"You're horrid," yelled Betty in return, "horrid. Is that the way to talk to me—Miss Ice—to—it?"

Bob suddenly realized. "Listen dear," he said in a subdued but firm tone, "this evidence of yours worries me all the time. I'm a little crazy, perhaps—and I admit I'm jealous. I guess the time has arrived for you to decide—me or your job. I won't be made a laughing stock before my friends."

Betty looked deeply in his eyes.

"Three months is enough I believe. I'm game. Shall we motor to Harrison tonight? . . .

The next day her press agent received a brief note:

"Dear Cupid—This note will surprise you but give us your congratulations anyway. Your arrows have shot too well—and we got a little scared. Mail is quick. So give my synthetic love to the baron—and I'm sorry you lost an account by being too good! I was signed Betty Burns Douglas.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking and thinking in his private chair and ma said, Willum, them men that approaches you on the street in a stealthy manner with a fur necktie and offer it to you in an underhand voice for a mere fraction of its so called value, they're horribly fakes, aren't they?

They're not, only fakes, they're robbers, extortionists, swindlers and hold up men, pop said, and ma said, That's what I think, when one of them approached me this afternoon with a supposed silver fox. I just laughed him to scorn.

You did well, but you'd of done still better to call a policeman, pop said. Those fellows are vultures praying on human credulity. If I had had my every opposite gold watch that's been offered to me on the streets by those rubber necked radicals I'd own quite a collection of old brass that would make a junkman's eyes glimen with envy. I know their little game, solid gold watches for the gentlemen and peerless furs for the ladies, pop said.

Exactly ma said. I suppose it wasn't very polite to laugh in his face, but it seemed so ridiculum, somehow, offering me an alleged 300 dollar silver fox with a steals face for 15 dollars. My, my, how distrusting. I said to him, and I added with bitterly veiled sarcasm. What did your ox do, was it alive, did it bark or did it meow? Really Willyum it was too preposterous. I dont know what ever freely inclined me to buy it from him, she said, and pop said, What! I mean yee gods you didn't really.

O, don't worry, I didn't give him any 15 dollars, ma said, I gave him 10 and told him he could take it or leave it, and I told him if he hesitated I'd reduce my offer to 5, and leave me be he took it quick, in fact he snapped at it like a flash in the pan, peering he knew he had met his master. And now, Willyum, wouldn't it be a grate lark, if it actualy did turn out to be a genuine silver fox? ma said, and pop said, A lark wouldn't be any name for it. It would be an eagle at the very least. In fact I wouldn't be a bit serprised if it would be a dodo bird, and now if you dont mind I'll resume my way into my tent, he said.

England's Young Conquering Diplomat

Captain Robert Anthony Eden, British Privy Seal, Becomes Known as The "Peacemaker of The Continent" at Only Thirty-Eight—Illness May Mean First Failure

If Europe remains peaceful it probably will be through the conference as held by Captain Robert Anthony Eden, British Lord Privy Seal in the various capitals of Europe

By ROBERT LOW

Central Press Canadian Writer

London, April 9— Europe's best-dressed diplomat, the young, dapper Captain Robert Anthony Eden of the British foreign office, is rapidly winning another title for himself—that of "Peacemaker of the Continent."

Dark-haired and moustached, trimly built and numbered among Britain's ablest-men, the lord privy seal, or "Tony" as he is known to his friends, is credited with more than one victory in saving the situation when certain European nations are growling at one another.

His sudden illness has precipitated great worry over the success of the Stresa conference which he will now be unable to attend though he was instrumental in arranging it. Doctors have ordered his six weeks' rest immediately.

Captain Eden's outstanding feats of adroit statesmanship have taken place recently, proving that he has yet to reach the pinnacle of his brilliant career.

Suave Peacemaker

When Italy was ready to declare war upon Jugoslavia after the assassination of King Alexander at Marseilles, and vice versa, late in 1934, Anthony—he usually foregoes the Robert—Eden stepped in and, with suavity that has never been surpassed in the tempestuous history of the League of Nations, not only cleared the bellicose atmosphere but saved the political "face" of both belligerent nations.

To-day, he is completing a series of conferences in Berlin, Warsaw and Moscow which may decide the fate of Europe. In each capital his visit causes what is known in foreign diplomatic circles as "feverish activity", for each country will realizes the importance of impressing the young Englishman, whose sartorial raiment is second only to the Prince of Wales.

Under the soft black Homburg hat, they know lies a mind which will deal skilfully with their international problems. They know, too, that under the very same hat and behind those piercing blue-gray eyes are hidden the secrets of England's foreign policy.

Next to Sir John

In rank, Captain Eden rates just under Sir John Simon, Britain's gray-haired practical, liberal-minded foreign secretary, who is as smart and canny a lawyer as ever donned the traditional gray wig in a British court. Captain Eden, who has been an apt pupil of Sir John's often is spoken of as the predestined successor to the present foreign secretary—unless the Laborites win out at the next general election. His title now is permanent undersecretary of state for foreign affairs — and lord privy seal.

The title of lord privy seal which makes him one of the small group of "confidential" advisors to King George, known as the privy council, or cabinet, was conferred upon him recently to give the roving diplomat added prestige abroad.

In June, Captain Eden will be 38, which is very youthful, indeed, for the staid precincts of Whitehall, famous street of English government buildings.

Born on the old family estate at Durham, the second son of Sir William Eden, Anthony was reared in the true conservative tradition—Eton—Oxford—the army —member of parliament.

Has Medal For Gallantry

Too young to enlist at the outbreak of the war, he joined up for active service a year later with the King's Royal Rifle corps, became a captain and won the Military Cross, one of the highest awards for gallantry. Even in the army his brilliance was not submerged for he became the youngest adjutant in the British army—and before he was 21 he was the youngest brigade major.

Later he saw service in the Far East, where he became interested in Oriental languages and when he returned to civil life entered Oxford university to specialize in these languages. The young aristocrat made his mark in the cloistered hall of Oxford as well, winning first-class honors, the highest possible scholastic attainment.

A short time after receiving his degree at Oxford, he turned his talents to politics. He was elected to parliament as a Conservative and made his debut in international affairs when he became parliamentary secretary to the then foreign secretary, Sir Austen Chamberlain.

Seizes Opportunity

When the present national government in England swept the polls at the 1931 elections, Eden became parliamentary undersecretary for foreign affairs—and made much more of his post than any of his predecessors.

His able handling of the post and his engaging personality soon led Sir John Simon to take Eden along on many of his important missions. When Sir John, who hates traveling, was not able to leave London, the task of representing Britain was shifted to the well-clad shoulders of Anthony Eden.

Speaking adequate French, "Tony" mixes well with foreigners —and his friendly and informal manner, despite his aristocratic bearing, have heightened his prestige and have made many a friend or Britain.

Praise From His Chief

Certainly one of the youngest men to hold a full-fledged cabinet position in England, Captain Eden has heard himself described by Sir John Simon as one "who with great skill and to our complete satisfaction has seen to it that the British government took its proper stand and played its proper part" at the League of Nations.

That he is counted upon by England as her best safeguard on the continent is summed up by Sir Austen Chamberlain, his former chief, in the following words:

"There is no one to whom I would with more confidence entrust the foreign affairs of Great Britain."

EASTER MEETING OF TRINITY W.M.S.

Madoc Members Assemble at Parsonage For Program

Madoc—The Easter meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of Trinity United Church was held at the parsonage. Mrs. Leslie Ashley the leader in charge of the program called on Mrs. J. Rutherford give the thoughts from the Devotional Leaflet, the theme of which was "The Friendship of Jesus". This was followed by a very appropriate solo "Jesus Never Failed" by Mrs. Huffman. The hymn "What a Friend We have in Jesus" was sung and prayer was offered by Mrs. Fair.

Mrs. Frank Dafoe then took charge of the business period. The roll call was answered by texts on "Friend." Mrs. M. Mayhee gave a short reading, "A Plea for the Envelope System". A report on the temperance situation was given by Mrs. Fair.

In place of the lesson from the Study Book, a report of the Presbyterial recently held in Picton was given by Mrs. Rivers, at the conclusion of which she was tendered a very hearty vote of appreciation.

Mrs. Ashley then conducted a very helpful Easter worship service.

The meeting was brought to a close with a social half-hour at which the hostess, Mrs. G. W. Rivers, was assisted by Mrs. Broad and Mrs. Fleming in serving a very tasty lunch.

The Reverend I. B. Kennedy of Bolton had charge of the regular Sunday services at Trinity United Church, having exchanged pulpits for the occasion with Rev. G. W. Rivers. The morning service was well attended and Reverend Kennedy was assisted by the choir with a special anthem and by a lovely solo by Mrs. J. Stevenson.

The regular evening service was also exceedingly well attended. The choir rendered "Mercy and Truth" and Mr. A. Abbot sang "God's Tomorrow". Reverend Kennedy spoke on "A Christian Appetite". To this end he referred to the causes of loss of a physical appetite, namely, (1) Disease (2) Unhealthy and Untasty Food (3) Lack of Fresh Air(4) Lack of Exercise and applied these four reasons to the apparent loss of religious appetite so predominant among Christian people.

St. Peter's W. M. S.

The April meeting of St. Peter's Presbyterian Church was held at the home of Mrs. George Holland with an attendance of twenty-three. The program was under the direction of Mrs. George West and Mrs. Frank Sharpe and was opened by singing the hymn "The Morning Light Is Breaking". Mrs. W. A. Hunter led in prayer. The Scripture lesson was read by Mrs. Hailstone. The hymn "O God Our Help In Ages Past" was sung. A short business period was conducted by the president, Mrs. John McCaffrey. The roll call was made and a collection amounting to over six dollars received. The visiting committee reported two calls made.

Mrs. Chas. Anderson rendered a lovely solo, Mrs. Frank Sharpe related the story of Dr. Jessie McBean in order to disclose the needs of China. Mrs. Carl McCoy gave an interesting paper on "Nearness to God". The work of the missions in Manchuria under Dr. Goforth was given by Mrs. Sharpe. The meeting was brought to a close with a hymn after which three quarters united in a social half-hour.

On Thursday evening last about eighty people of Madoc and vicinity gathered in the High School Auditorium to hear Dr. John W. S. McCullough, Chief Inspector of Health in Ontario, give a very interesting lecture on Cancer. The meeting was sponsored by the Madoc Branch of the Women's Institute and the W. C. T. U. Reverend G. W. Rivers in the absence of Dr. E. Hagerman, local Health officer, acted as chairman and called upon Dr. S. B. Beatty, local practitioner, to introduce the guest speaker.

Dr. McCullough gave an interesting and instructive talk on cancer.

Filibuster Ends When Power Contracts Bill is Given Second Reading

27 Hours of Debate Ends With Hon. Mr. Nixon Calling Vote

LIBERALS WIN 42-15

Budget Debate is Closed by Short Address by Premier

TORONTO, April 10—(CP)—Exhausted after 27 hours of continuous session with adjournment only for meals, Ontario Legislators stumbled to bed after the Legislature adjourned at four o'clock this morning with the hint seeping into weary brains the Government might negotiate with holders of bonds in Quebec Power Companies, whose Ontario contracts the Government proposes to cancel.

The Contract Termination Bill, one of the longest legislation in Ontario's history, received second reading yesterday after a 21-2 hour blockade missed fire and passed through committee at 3.40 o'clock this morning amended by Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn with respect to the time it would become law.

The only amendment to the bill provided it should come into effect when it received the royal assent but "on the day to be named by the Lieut.-Governor."

"It may be possible to negotiate with the shareholders of the various companies," said Mr. Hepburn after Conservatives protested against the amendment. He refused after adjournment to reveal the Government's intentions but said the first task was to get the Bill through and the next move would be up to the bondholders.

Bill Moves Hoist

The Power Bill came up at 4.05 o'clock Monday afternoon, when Premier Hepburn spoke the second reading. The Opposition attack, started by Conservative Leader George S. Henry, continued until that time until 5.30 p.m. yesterday, when Wilfrid Heighington (Cons., Toronto-St. David), moved to give the Bill six months hoist.

"Shall the amendment carry?" asked Speaker N. O. Hipel, Opposition members raised their cry. Before A. H. Acres (Cons., Carleton), could demand the privilege of speaking to the Bill, an action calculated to throw the debate wide open once more, Conservative members murmured "yes", which automatically recorded a vote on the amendment.

Provincial Secretary H. C. Nixon demanded the main question be put, as P. Bill (Cons., Hastings East), tried to regain lost ground for the Opposition by moving a five months' hoist. Speaker Hipel ruled the Bill Amendment out of order and the 27-15 vote defeated the Heighington Amendment. On another division the House upheld by 42-15 that the question be put and the main motion to give the Legislation second reading was carried on the same division.

Budget Carried

France Advocates Force To Keep Europe's Peace; Stand Causes Sensation

Latin Races Will Attempt to Bring Britain to Concrete Plan

STRESA AND LEAGUE

Russia Moves For Armed Aid in Time of Need

By JOSEPH E. SHARKEY

Stresa, Italy, Apr. 10.— France's move to put teeth in the League of Nations covenant by agreements to employ force for the maintenance of European peace created a sensation at Stresa today.

Officials gathered for tomorrow's tripartite conference interpreted the proposal to mean France regards the political situation in Europe as dangerous as in consequence of Germany's repudiation of the military clauses of the Treaty of Versailles.

Observers also construed the move as signifying whatever other course may do, France and Russia are determined to go ahead with a pact of mutual military assistance.

As Premier Mussolini is known to want realties instead of glowing phrases as the result of the Stresa conversations, the impression here is that the two Latin nations will seek to bring Great Britain into a concrete program.

Agreement For Force.

"It is generally regarded they will press for an agreement to use force for the preservation of Europe's peace within the limits of the sanctions provisions of the League of Nations' covenant.

France's objective was soon as an attempt to restrain Germany in the event of a military gesture or putsch in Rhenel or Austria, for example, and definitely bring the power to be armed front against Germany in the event of an unequivocal German aggression.

Swiftly moving events indicate the Stresa parleys will have a powerful influence on the League's destiny. Both France and Russia are basing their foreign policy on Geneva, with Moscow recently showing more zeal for this procedure than France.

Italy's Policy.

Italy's policy is largely affected by the fact any German push southward in an attempt to annex Austria or Hungary would be a vital to her security as to that of the Little Entente.

Pessimism is expressed in some quarters that the continental security system with German participation emerges from the Stresa deliberations, the powers continue to build defensive preparations and negotiations for mutual assistance pacts and assistance because of fear of the future.

Policy of Mediation.

London, Apr. 10 (CP) — Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald and Sir John Simon, Foreign Secretary, left this morning for Stresa, Italy, and the special conference on Europe's peace problems.

The two statesmen will spend the remainder of the day in Paris, departing from there on Italy on a night train. With them they were understood to carry a plan for an Anglo-French pact of mutual assistance which they will propose to the three European delegations and their Italian hosts.

An authoritative source stated the British will inform the French and Italians they are willing to have Great Britain become an active member of the system to a limited extent if the other two powers will accept Great Britain's policy of mediation. But they can enter no commitments without the approval of parliament.

Brothers Hopeful.

MacDonald and Sir John were reported to be hopeful they could head off any sharp anti-German moves by Italy.

While the two ministers left by air, a large staff of British experts started for Italy by train.

Before he entered the plane, MacDonald said: "We are starting on a mission of international good' will and co-operation, united with security and peace. I hope with all my heart we will be successful. We shall certainly try to be."

Two local news stands were robbed in the city sometime early today sustaining a combined total loss of nearly $1,000, in cigars, tobacco, cigarettes, pipes, lighters and tobacco sundry accessories. The stores to be burglarized were Eddie Thomas' 182 Front St. and Jimmie Alexander's, situated in the footbridge gangway. The robbers gained entrance by forcing doors in both buildings.

The first intimation of matters being amiss came, when P. C. Thompson found a rear window had been forced open at Thomas' cigar store at 5.10 a.m. today. Further search disclosed that the store had been robbed. Some minutes later, news-boys, delivering morning papers to Alexander's found the front door of that store had been forced open. P. C. Thomson had only 30 minutes previously tried the doors at Alexander's and found all secure.

At Thomas' store goods to the value of nearly $500.00 were taken in what police believe to be the work of an organized gang operating in this district. From the cigar machine in Thomas' was removed, broken open in the rear and had

Moccasin Snake Venom to be Used

Windsor, Ont., April 10—(CP)—If the need arises, Dr. Maurice Lefroe today said he would resort to use of moccasin snake venom in the case of Eva Kinisel, 26, confined in hospital here with an intestinal blood disorder. Slight improvement is reported in the condition of the young woman.

A test of her blood shows there are now approximately 70,000 platelets in her blood, where there were only 50,000 when she was first treated.

Normally she would have 300,000.

Reference to the snake venom was made during discussion of an article in a medical journal in which its use for various bleeding troubles was described by Dr. Samuel M. Peck and Dr. Nathan Rosenthal of Mount Sinai Hospital, New York.

"I think the snake venom is a work on miracles," Dr. Lefroe said concerning them, so the blood does not get clotted." Quoted Dr. Lefroe: "We will use the snake venom first, and meanwhile I will wire the two Mount Sinai doctors to send me some of it."

"MIKE" McTERNAN DIES BY ACCIDENT

Inquest Held on Tuesday Night to Inquire Into Death

Death by accident was the verdict given by the coroner's jury looking into the death of Michael McTernan, Point Anne labourer who met his death, when he fell from a scaffold at the Canada Cement plant No. 4 on April 1st. During the course of the inquest held before Coroner Dr. R. W. Tennent at the Police Court room, Belleville, it was established by attending physician that the deceased man had died in the Belleville General Hospital as the result of a broken neck received, when he fell to the scaffold at Point Anne.

The adjourned inquest opened promptly at 8.00 p.m. last night and only three witnesses were called, identification having been established one week prior. Joseph Tutak, foreman of the dismantling crew at Point Anne, Mr. McTernan's boss, informed the inquest that he did not actually see Mr. McTernan fall, but heard the crash. He told of the deceased man being last engaged in the matter of dismantling old buildings, the gang being engaged in tearing down the old plant No. 4. Just prior to losing his balance, McTernan was standing with his left foot on a steel girder and his right one on a wooden joist, that had been loosened. The joist apparently slid from under neath McTernan, causing him to lose his balance and fall some 25 feet below.

Henry Allen, a fellow workman, informed the inquest, that he had seen the deceased man fall, all three men working on the job being alert at the time. Dr. R. W. Kennedy who attended the injured man, informed the proceedings, that McTernan had died as the result of a broken neck. Dr. Kennedy described the injured man at Point Anne and again at the hospital.

The coroner's jury consisted of W. A. Woodley, foreman, Wm. Hatden F. Gustiblet, Geo. Dulmage, F. McDonald, C. Bateman, Chas. Walters, Gerald Spafford and Chas. Cochrane.

Veterans Commemorate Battle Of Vimy in Fitting Manner

Place Wreath on Cenotaph And Enjoy Banquet at Memorial Hall

A short but impressive service at the cenotaph, the placing of a wreath on behalf of the United Empire Loyalists of Ontario, Mayor George O. Tice followed by a banquet at the Memorial Hall, marked the observance of Queens University was the chief speaker marking the fifteenth anniversary of the Battle of Vimy Ridge in this city last night, and it was one of the most enjoyable functions ever to be staged by the veterans. A note of sadness was always prevalent during the function as those, who were Hrs. remembered their comrades of other days and who gave their lives, that others might enjoy peace and goodwill. Dr. George H. Stobie, president of the United Veterans, was chairman at the meeting, and in his capacity kept the interest of the affair at a high pitch.

Veterans, wearing the berets and arm bands of their division, led by the Pipe Band and His Worship the Mayor and Clerk, formed the parade being in command of Warrant Officer William Jack, D.C.M. and Bar, M.M., and Bar, paraded at the Memorial Hall, shortly after seven o'clock and marched in a body to the cenotaph at Memorial Park. It was a fine turnout of veterans this city has even seen and the boys swung along the main street, eyed by thousands of citizens, in perfect marching time, so reminiscent of war days. Reaching the cenotaph, the parade was formed up around the flagpole, Padre A. E. Beauchamp Payne, padre of the 155th Light Infantry, officiating in a simple service. A prayer was read, the Lord's Prayer was recited, the "Last Post" was sounded with a silence of a minute and the Mayor placed a wreath on the base of the cenotaph. Reforming the veterans marched again to the Memorial Hall, street dismissing in front of the Memorial Hall and retired to the banquet room where the dinner entertainment continued until an early hour today.

After grace was rendered by Rev. R. E. Newman, a toast to Our Fallen Comrades was proposed by Rev. Mr. Newman and following the toast the lights were dimmed and a spot light was focused on the vacant chair and the table of sacrifice above. Absolute silence reigned until the orchestra broke in with "Roses of Picardy" followed by "Over There" and the "Last Post" followed by "Reveille". The banquet prepared by the organize committee of veterans and members from each organization in the city was most enjoyable and during the evening the veterans were entertained by Cowain and Hastings of Picton. Community singing was indulged in with Mr. Bowen leading. The banquet was in the direction of Reg Hinchey supplying the music in a most delightful manner. The orchestra is composed entirely of returned men with Mr. A. W. Hinchey as leader and the veterans are sure proud of their band.

Dr. Austin Speaker

Dr. Austin was introduced to the gathering by Dr. O. S. Cronk and the Professor from Queen's University kept the crowd in gales of laughter with his address "Odds and Ends." Dr. Austin has no peer as an after dinner speaker, being able to hold his audience with tales of the days when he was also during his active campaign overseas as a medical officer. The serious side of the war was also stressed and the lessons that could be taken from it, the speaker hoping, that the next war was the war to end war, and that there should be a concentrated effort to bring about peace and goodwill among the nations of the earth. The toast to "Canada and the Empire" which was ably proposed by Wing Commander Johnson, M.C., of R.A.F., who was met for the first time by many veterans since he took over the duties at the air base and the fine impression was that Wing Commander Johnson will be made welcome at anytime, where veterans gather. Col. E. J. McLean of Picton, responding to the toast in his usual affable manner praising the veterans for their part in the great battle of war, that by their actions Canada was raised to the status of an nation.

The action at Vimy Ridge was also related by the speaker and special praise was given the hardy first division for their stand at the Second Battle of Ypres. He believed that through the efforts of Britain for peace, war in Europe would be averted. He asked the veterans to stand by our Empire" and to stand true to the principles for which they fought in 1914-18. Col. W. N. Ponton V.D., one always interested in the veterans' cause told his audience to stand fast in the time of need and Canada would emerge with the highest honors. The vote of thanks for the splendid addresses was moved by Col. Roscoe Vanderwater D.S.O. and ably seconded by Col. Hinchey.

During the evening tickets were sold on a travelling case and watch, donated to the veterans and the drawing, which took place after the addresses created considerable interest. Harry Ranson was the winner of the travelling case and Claude D. Tice the watch.

orchestra proceeded with tunes of army days and the boys whiled away an hour singing these favorite songs. The remainder of the evening was spent in social intercourse, and many of the veterans were introduced to Lieutenant Rutherford Colborne, who holds the V.C. and M.C., and was the honored guest at the function. The National Anthem closed a most successful affair and the committee in charge are to be congratulated on their fine arrangements.

COUNSEL TO STUDY CODE ON CHARGE

Enlargement Till Monday of Cases Concerning Slot Machines

Further enlargement requested in order, that close scrutiny of the criminal code may be afforded the counsels concerned in the much-talked-of slot machine cases, that were to have been presented in the local police court yesterday morning, was granted this morning upon mutual agreement between the prosecution and the defendants. The controversy arose when Charles A. Payne, K.C., appearing for the fourteen local business men charged with keeping a common gaming house, tested the court as to trial jurisdiction in the matter of alleged illegal operation of slot machines.

Following debates between Mr. Payne and Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan K.C., His Worship granted a further adjournment until Monday, April 15th., when only operators of slot machines will face the court in test cases. The question as to whether the magistrate under the Criminal Code, has the jurisdiction to try such cases summarily or whether the accused have the right to elect in what court he is to be tried was the point of discussion raised by Mr. Payne as the court opened. This point of legal argument will be taken up when the cases arrived at before Monday.

In Monday's magistrate Butler requested that a copy of the recent city by-law, in which slot machines were licensed in Belleville, be placed in his hands whereupon he might study the wording of the licensing clauses. The by-law copy was subsequently presented to His Worship and he immediately proceeded to closely observe its contents. The court remained in session after an abruptly following the single charge of keeping a slot machine in court in relationship to the operation of slot machines in Belleville. Two machines machines being confiscated one week ago for alleged illegal operating. No other cases were presented in the court.

SYRUP PRICE OFF AT BROCKVILLE

Heaviest Production in Many Years is Reported

Brockville, Ont., April 10.— (CP) —With the heaviest production of maple syrup and sugar in many years, Leeds and Grenville producers are facing a falling market. Ideal weather conditions, coupled with a desire on the part of farmers to realize an immediate cash return, have brought about almost unparalleled activity in the sugar bushes and a large production is being accumulated awaiting a market.

Syrup prices started at $1.75 to $2 a gallon and have now dropped to $1.25 to $1.50, a decrease of 40 per cent of even a greater fall since the market in Montreal with refineries. Sugar prices are holding at the level of other seasons at 30 cents and 25 cents a pound with the probability of an early decline in harmony with the drop in syrup.

REGINA MEMBER ADDRESSES CLUB
Western Situation is Discussed with Women

At the Women's Conservative Club last evening, a capacity audience was present, with the principal speakers who addressed the gathering being Mr. Hinchey, chairman of M.P., who spoke on conditions generally, and particularly on the part the Government had played in connection with the harbour commission. Mr. Hinchey also delivered a special speaker of the evening, Mr. F. W. Turnbull, K.C., member for Regina.

Mr. Turnbull gave an inspiring and illuminating address. Ontario, he said, relies greatly on the West. When that country prospers the western provinces are good, Ontario industries benefit. His address was in a pleasing manner voiced the appreciation of the Liberal party for the splendid addresses of the evening." Mrs. J. Sanderson made a graceful speech paying an eloquent tribute to the work of Mr. Tunmon as the member for Prince Edward, and thanking him for splendid record of the Conservative party."

The club rooms were tastefully decorated with ferns and daffodil blossoms. A social evening followed the program and tea was poured by Mrs. Lovekin, assisted by those by the convners, Mrs. Hyde, Mrs. Hinchey, Mrs. Ross and Mrs. Mercier, of Ketcheson and Baldwin Wards.

2 STORES ROBBED, THOUSAND DOLLAR BOOTY IS TAKEN
the money removed, the machine being thrown into the Motra River, where it was later found by the police, Mr. Thomas stated today that all of his more expensive cigars in the ten and fifteen cent line had been taken, while all of his more valuable pipes and cigar lighters were also missing. Besides tobaccos and cigar store accessories boxes of chocolates and other sweets were included in the haul. The stolen goods were apparently packed into card board cartons to make the parcels more easy to handle, police believe, a carton partially filled with cigar store accessories was found abandoned behind the north show case in Thomas' store. Where the robbers had been either disturbed or frightened off by the breaking of daylight. Mr. Thomas in a hurried report estimated his loss at about 100 boxes of high priced cigars, the pipes valued up to $10.00 each and the accessories which would elevate his loss to nearly $500. The slot machine was recovered from the river by police, but was found to be broken and unable to be of further use.

Fresh Shipment Taken

When questioned today Mr. Alexander was of the opinion that his loss was equally as bad as Mr. Thomas', in the latter's store a fresh shipment of 1200 new cigars along with many high priced boxes of chocolates. Entrance was gained by means of forcing the back door, which was doubly locked. Visible signs of forcible entry were found on His Worship's iron or steel bar to force the door open were seen, when the police arrived. Besides the loss of cigars, Mr. Alexander's stock of cigarettes was also taken, the robbers working in the same manner as Mr. Thomas' as three large cartons were missing. Mr. Alexander's loss in cigarettes having been used as paper containers. Mr. Alexander estimates his loss at nearly $500.00, all being goods, that would be easily disposed of in a large centre.

Information of the robbery was forwarded to all the surrounding cities throughout the district by local police with hopes of apprehending the robbers. Both stores stated to be travelling in a motor car. According to reports, the goods were removed from the local places of business and carried some little distance in the cartons where they were deposited in waiting automobiles and carried out of the city. As pointed out by police authorities, the robberies were practically all of a quality, that could be easily disposed of in this be-ode-dum. Simpson's and constables as well as the day force were brought into action to further investigate the worst robbery that has visited Belleville this year. No trailes an immediate clue, has been brought about almost unparalleled activity in the sugar bushes and a large production is being accumulated awaiting a market.

Agricultural Conditions

Hastings—Weather has been unfavourable for alfalfa and clover. Rain is needed. Spring litters and lambs are doing well but cattle have not wintered as well as usual, and spring losses are above the average. Maple syrup plentiful at $1.50, per gallon.

Prince Edward—The past ten days have been ideal sugar weather. Farmers report a big run of sap but it has been exceptionally hard on fall wheat and clover. Fields look very brown and unless the thawing and freezing ceases shortly the crop is sure to be seriously damaged.

Prince Edward—The continued cold clear nights and sunny days are very hard on wheat and clover. Fairly good runs of sap occurred last week. Demand for dairy cattle picking up.

Frontenac—During the past week there have been a few heavy frosts and reports are that some harvesting has taken place on the meadows and this may mean the killing of some of the new seeding of clover and alfalfa. A few more cheese factories have opened for the season past week. The production of milk, however, is still low and will not show much increase until there are good pasture conditions. Cattle, enrolled and blood tested milk cows meet a ready demand at prices ranging from $40 to $50 for grades and as high as $100 per head for pure breds.

Lennox and Addington—The last week has been hard on fall wheat, alfalfa and clover. There are a very little growth as yet and it is just time to see how they will come through. Practically no seeding has been done. There will be a larger acreage than usual or barley for malting purposes.

Tourist Association Formed To Advocate Advantages of District as Tourist Centre

Meeting at Chamber of Commerce Sets Wheels in Motion

LARGE GATHERING

Plans Go Forward to Induce Tourists to Visit Quinte District

Representatives of the municipalities of Hastings, Lennox-Addington and Northumberland counties, who met at the office of the local Chamber of Commerce yesterday afternoon at a special meeting called, through the naming of district chairmen of the area named, took the first step toward the formation of a constituted Bay of Quinte Tourist and Publicity Association.

The formation of the new organization will mark the first actual effort of associated Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce of this central district to attract greater tourist trade to the region.

Present at the meeting which was called for chiefly the purpose of discussing ways and means of promoting greater tourist trade in the section were representatives of Madoc, Tweed, Stirling, Deseronto, Brighton, Napanee, and points throughout Hastings County. Informal discussion marked the conferences which was described as one of the most important yet held in this city, in regard to better advertising of the natural advantages of this and surrounding counties and the consequent bettering of tourist trade.

E. V. Illsley Chairman

Named by popular vote as chairman of the afternoon, Mr. E. V. Illsley who presided called attention to the conflicts interest which all municipalities find in the matter of better advertising and attractions for tourists who annually visit Canada and this section. Mr. Illsley outlined the "tremendous opportunities" which this central section possessed and upon this and the potentialities of the various municipalities to use them.

"We must not be too pretentious; we must not allow ourselves to over-advertise, but rather stick to facts. This year will be a good year for tourists, so we are advised, and it is up to us to do our combined district best to take advantage of it. We must make it an attractive region so we can for them. Courtesy and common civic pride are two words, just give them something a little different from what they are accustomed to and they will come back year after year," he urged.

As the question for those who assembled, Mr. Illsey pointed out the influence of practical "welcome cards," which could be printed cheaply with the compliments of the city or municipality and distributed to the tourists, containing all the salient points in the district named. Such as well as ordinary citizens, gas station attendants and others could distribute cards, he pointed out.

"Courtesy is the main point in our treatment with those, who come to visit us," said Mr. Illsey. "Next we must have facilities for them. If they come to fish they will need guides. If they want accommodation we must see, that they get something better boarding places. If you send them away with a smile, you can depend upon it they will come back with one."

Agricultural Potential Fishing

Pointing to a highly colored folder, which advertised the vantages of fishing in an eastern province, Chairman Illsey called attention to the fact, that the Bay of Quinte region was one of the best known fishing grounds on the continent. A question as to the merits of allowing commercial fishing to continue by the surrounding waters brought a quick answer from Mr. L. R. Taylor, Deseronto.

"It should have been stopped years ago. One of the worst features of commercial fishing has been the pound nets, placed sometimes right in the spawning beds. The way some of those nets have been clearing up is a crime," he declared. And the lackity in regard to policing the districts, where the nets have been placed is also reflected. The people, who take fish any way they can get them should be stopped," declared Mr. Detlor.

"Hay Bay, one of the finest breeding grounds for pike in the Dominion of Canada has been cleared of them, due solely to the pound nets. I've seen 'lunge half the length of that table there that have been caught in the nets. So far as I know the regulations regarding netting them have never been adhered to."

"Last year we were supposed to have had one of the best bass fishing seasons in the past thirty years, yet all the bass that were caught were the small ones. You don't get the larger ones any more. Four and five pound bass are a novelty now."

"It's the same way with deer hunting. The game laws don't seem to be enforced. I saw more deer last fall in the nine days I was out than I had seen for the past five years. The only point I got from the bush was the reason, but I don't know why any man with a rifle dogs again for deer. If the deer had been let alone a tourist could have shot one in the next five years through the back country and snapshot them anywhere."

Supported in Vein

Mr. Wilfred S. Wilson, Napanee, also supported the statement by Chairman Illsey that lack of proper game enforcement was responsible for a great loss of game fish. "If proper netting was exercised we there would be no loss of fish. The real fishermen, after all, are not after game fish, but there are a certain few, who make a habit of trying to get as many as they can," he added.

Mr. Wilson favored the idea of a game preserve being set up in this district similar to the one started for those who visit the region.

In a spirited attack on the unethical methods of some fishermen, Mr. O. Alyea, Trenton, voiced his opinion that the practice of attempting to find out just how many fishermen were legalized to net in the Bay of Quinte was most interesting to learn just what revenue this was made from.

"From Nigger Island to the head of the bay there must be five miles of nets. I'd like to find out just how much the average fishermen makes from this, but I can't," added Mr. Alyea.

"I have been told, that the fishermen take black bass and pickerel out of their nets and sell them as game fish."

"Years ago we used to be able to go out and get four and five pound perfect specimens of black bass. We have the best breeding grounds for black bass in the world. Now I don't bother about fishing the bay at all any more. I go to Algonquin Park, where I know I can catch something if I try. Hay Bay was one of the finest fishing grounds on this continent. From the mouth of the Napanee River to Bob Waddell's Camp we could always get good fishing, but it isn't possible any longer."

Fishermen For Guides

"If we can convince the government, that the revenue secured from the fishermen is nothing as compared to what it will get from the tourist trade, if these fishing grounds are left alone, then we might do something. And then we can turn the fishing guides loose —there are only a few of them, perhaps twenty at most legally licensed for nets between Napanee and Deseronto. They'll earn more money than they ever have before. The government to shut them off suddenly, but by attrition the number numbers, and in ten years the government will get many times the revenue it gets now from selling fishermen."

"In the north the trout fishing is whipped. All through Hastings County streams have been cleared out. I used to be given the privilege of fishing through some farm places, but now I am told to get out I saw a clear path alone one stream where there was the fishermen. I know one Belleville man, that went out one time with a net, and caught a mess and got a bag full of trout. The farmer got the car numbers and turned them over to the police, but I don't know if anything was done on it."

Mr. Alyea concluded his remarks with the firm suggestion, that all representatives of districts take on the self appointed duties as special game policemen for the protection of game fishing in their particular districts. To this effect it was further advised, that a "round robin" be signed by all members present agreeing to take on such duties immediately with a sworn purpose of combatting infractions of existing game laws.

"It appears to me, that commercial fishing is just the voice of a few against that of many," suggested Chairman Illsey as the question was explained. "It would seem that fishermen, acting in the capacity of game wardens will make much more than they do now."

Retves, Clerks, Active

Brief remarks made by county clerk Erie Denyes to the assembly of delegates from local retves and clerks of the different municipalities had been requested by the Hastings County Council publicity committee to secure needed snapshots of festoons erected by the respective sections, with the idea in mind of their being suitably advertised.

Reeve G. M. Wallbridge of Madoc Village pointed to the necessity of suitable signs for concession roads leading to the lakes and in the northern section of the county. Signboards could be painted out, marked with suitable inscriptions advertising either trout or bass fishing and giving a distance from the lake or territory ahead. Netting in the northern lakes and alleged laxity of game laws enforcement in the north part of the county was also censured by the Reeve. He charged, that last summer one net lifted out of Moira Lake and contained twelve fair sized 'lunge. "Now and then the game warrens go out and pull up one of the nets, but they apparently never seem to get to the right ones. Years ago we used to catch all kinds of 'lunge in Moira Lake. Now, we still have good 'lunge fishing, but you have to know where to go. We have perfect accommodation for tourists back at Madoc and we are going to do our share to get some of the tourist trade," he added.

Mr. Norman Thompson, Brighton, suggested the immediate erection of temporary tourist stations along the main highways, where tents or even cabins could be established, with a capable man in charge, dealing out literature of the district about to be traversed. This could, he pointed out, be made reciprocal between communities, with exchange of literature arranged. It was also suggested that the one could or might be borne by a central executive of the area affected.

Advertise Advised

E. R. Curry, Tweed, reminded the fullest cooperation of the Tweed Community Club in fostering better and greater tourist trade. He convanced the suggestion, that all reputable fishing grounds should be advertised by the Association about to be formed. Also that the Bay of Quinte, which included the services of a guide, were cited by him as being in effect at one North Hastings Camp. Mr. Curry offered the facilities of his publishing office as an information depot for tourists.

"Let the advertising of the north part of the district be done by the Boards of the Townships and then steer them back there," advised Mr. Thos. Holmes, Stirling. "If you do that the north will benefit as well as the south but you will have to have proper advertising."

The speakers also supported more rigid enforcement of existing game laws and today of being called at his home the other day fresh caught pickerel from a car occupied by two men, entered from Belleville.

A. S. Miller, Brighton, called attention to the claim, that not all tourists, who came from across the border did so to fish. "We have fish as a main asset for fishing, but any booklets we have published should contain other note besides those of fishing," he added. "We should also stress the fact, that we have beautiful camping ground, particularly in the district of Brighton, and if that is what they are after we will be able to give it to them. On the other hand, if they stop over to camp and want to fish, we will be able to send them down to this district here. The idea does not need a reciprocal one."

Restock Lakes

A concentrated effort should be made by members of the new association to encourage the government to restock lakes throughout the district annually, suggested Mr. W. H. Morden, Belleville in a letter at regular intervals then the lakes are bound to be fished out," he added.

"I might add at this juncture, that the Belleville Rod and Gun Association are doing reoman work in this respect," rejoined Mr. Illsey. "We have much to thank them for their interest in both promoting interest in the proper restocking of fishing and in conservation work."

"Scenic motion picture and" feature, that should not be overlooked," commented Mr. J. H. Price, referring to Presque'isle district, in suggesting the contention that not all who came here came to fish and not Ontario to fish.

Mr. Laurie Lewis advanced the suggestions as a member of the Belleville Rotary Merchants' Association, that a particular tourists area in this district be formed; that this publicity bureau with dogs be brought up for consideration that the question of commercial fishing at the district be thoroughly examined; that the proposition of absolute prohibition of netting in the Bay of Quinte be entertained, and if found unfavorable, that the government be memorializing to pass such a law. Men who now hold licenses for fish could be formed into an association of guides, it was pointed out by those speaking.

On the motion of Mr. O. Alyea, Trenton, seconded by Mr. P. S. Kirby, Deseronto, the suggestion by Mr. Illsey, that the association known as the Bay of Quinte Tourist and Publicity Association be formed was unanimously carried.

It was moved by W. J. Hill, Madoc, seconded by Mr. O. Alyea, Napanee, that the Belleville Chamber of Commerce be empowered to appoint a president and secretary of the new body, District representatives were then appointed by Chairman Illsey, as follows:

Madoc—Reeve G. Wallbridge.

Deseronto—F. Kirby.
Brighton—A. S. Miller.
Trenton—O. Alyea.
Napanee—W. B. Wilson.

Among those present were—Wilfred S. Wilson, Napanee; J. H. Fitzpatrick, Napanee; Will J. Hill, Madoc; G. M. Wallbridge, Madoc; T. G. Thompson, Napanee; O. Alyea, Trenton; Thos. W. ## TWO DECAPITATED FOR PART IN CRIME

Aryan And Jew in Germany Pay Penalty With Lives

(Copyright, 1935, By The Associated Press)

Berlin, April 10 (AP)—The Ministry of Justice announced today that Sally Eppstein, Jew, and Erich Ziegler, 36-year-old Aryan, paid Germany's penalty for murder.

The two men were accused of complicity in the murder of Nazi German's hero, Horst Wessel, five years ago.

Eppstein, who was 38 years old, was said to be the first Jew beheaded in German history. He, and Ziegler, both Communists, were condemned to death after their cases had been brought to court for rehearing last June. Wessel, the man, whose name the official Nazi song bears, was slain in 1930 in an alleged political plot.

The executions took place in the courtyard of Plotzensee prison in Berlin, where two women, Marianne Benita Von Falkenhayn and Renate Von Natzmer, recently met death by the executioner's axe for revealing military secrets to the Polish Gen. Baron George Sosnowski.

Wessel, Wessel, martyred bard of Nazism, was slain in a fight which developed after he engaged in an altercation with a Communist over his rent bill. The shooting occurred February 14, 1930, and the Nazi communists subsequently were given particularly severe sentences up to six years before the fall of the republic of the Reich Government.

Erich Ziegler, who has always steadfastly denied they were accomplices in the slaying were sentenced to death June 15, 1934.

At the first trial Ali Hoehler, who later died serving his six-year sentence, admitted he held a personal grudge against Wessel but contended he fired the fatal shot in self-defence.

The prosecution asserted the post was shot in cold blood by Communists for political reasons.

About Automobile Appearance

Appearance plays an important part in everyday life, a more important part than many people think. Things that are drab, discolored and ugly, depress us, perhaps without our realizing it. Anything that are bright, fresh and colorful have a cheerful soothing effect. This applies to our houses and their furnishings. It applies to our clothes and it applies to our cars. An automobile doesn't need to have a good appearance in order to run, certainly not. But well venture to say that 99 out of 100 people feel far more at ease with a smooth, fresh finish than on one that is fargy, faded and shabby.

You may not be able to afford a new car this year, but you can have a smart-looking one, at very small expense. Have your car rejuvated by an expert, and let us suggest Campbell's Auto Paint Shop located at 325 Coleman Street for the work. They are specialists at it, and they don't do anything else, so they restore the finish of your car like it was in 1935, and guarantee it—and when it first left the factory. When you get it back from Campbell's Auto Paint Shop you'll have the sensation of driving a new car. Your friends will hardly know it is on one of the new models you will get much better deal than you would otherwise. Take your car to Campbell's Auto Paint Shop today. The job won't take long and the reasonable charge will surprise you. Best of all is the thrill you'll get when you see your old car completely transformed into one of glistening newness. Campbell's Auto Paint Shop's phone number is 1770. (Protected 1935).*

"Ship Wreck" Social Is Latest Innovation In Entertainment

A Shipwreck Social under the auspices of the Young People's Society of Foxboro church, was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Longwell. There was a good number present and the programme and costumes were of a shipwreck nature, and there was surely some unusual outfits. Mrs. Graham from Belleville won first prize for the best outfit, Mrs. Jacques second. Mr. Brook won first for the men. A number voiced the opinion that it was the best entertainment held in some time. It being Mr. and Mrs. Longwell's wedding anniversary, refreshments were presented with a box of chocolates. The ladies served lunch.

Mr. and Mrs. G. D. McCullough spent Sunday night with Mr. Bell and Nellie.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Dickens and Mrs. Rodgers, Norwood spent the dinner hour with Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Lake.

Mrs. Demergest from the west is visiting her daughter, Mrs. John Longwell.

Mr. James Lake lost one of his horses recently.

The sawing machine is making its last trip in this vicinity.

BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY

Some sidelights on the industrial situation can be gleaned from the April letter of Alexander Hamilton Institute, in an analysis of Canadian business conditions. It quotes a compilation of the Financial Post showing that of fifty industrial companies forty-four showed an increase in profits in 1934 while only six reported a profit below that of 1933. Total net profits of the fifty companies for 1934 amounted to $17,500,000 as compared with $14,250,000 in 1933, an increase of over 23 per cent. In public utility companies sixteen reported an increase total of over two millions of dollars, while the profit of seven mining companies rose from $9,040,000 to $10,758,000 in 1934. Profits of food companies were not so large as they were in 1933, but equipment companies made a spectacular recovery, ten reporting net profits for 1934 of $703,110, as compared with a net loss of $106,085 in 1933. There was an increase in profits of ten Canadian textile companies of half a million dollars.

The letter commenting on this says: "The increase in net profits of Canadian companies reflects not merely better business conditions, but also that the corporations have been in a position to readjust their rates of production. It is expected that the larger increase in profits will result in an increase in dividend payments which in the future will tend to strengthen the capital market of the Dominion."

General business trend continued upward in February reaching a new peak for the month and exceeding by the institute's trade activity index February's composite business was 4.3 per cent above the previous month, 41.7 per cent above a year ago, the preliminary March reports indicate some slackening in the rate of expansion. Total employment at the beginning of March was 2.5 per cent higher than on February 1st, while manufacturing employment gained 2.9 per cent. Production totals in major industries were also higher, but instances lower in February than in the previous month but the decreases were mostly less than the usual seasonal amount. Automobile production was higher than in January. There was a further rise in commodity prices in February.

Canadian mineral production amounted to $278,337,000 as compared with $221,495,253 in 1933, an increase of 25.7 per cent for all types of minerals. The largest increase took place in metals which rose from $147,000,000 to $193,000,000 for an increase of 31 per cent. But the greatest increase was in gold production, silver coming second.

A HEATHEN

General Erich Ludendorff on his 70th birthday was proud to call himself "an anti-Christian." He made this clear to an interviewer and blamed Christianity for all the woes which have fallen upon Germany in the war years. He said he saw German revival only begin with the open renunciation of Christianity. Will the German people achieve the unity it needs? In the same breath he spoke of Germany's moral right to rearm and of the menace of Christianity. "For a people to limit its armaments is an offence against the most sacred and most divine laws. If the English and other countries want to limit armaments that is their own lookout but they will slip farther down from their former heights," he said.

That may possibly be the general's own view but it sounds like spite, as if any excuse has to be found to satisfy German national pride in order to blame away the disaster on which Germany launched in 1914. It sounds very much like the recent German religious patent whose nominal creator is Hitler. It looks like a mere bit of effective play to spur on the Germans.

But there are some Germans who are not to be spurred on in that way. Catholic and Protestant Churches refused to display flags for Ludendorff's birthday, though Hitler himself had ordered the flying of flags for honor.

The utterance of Ludendorff looks like an attempt to get rid of the implications and obligations of Christianity. Germany tried to be nominally Christian and yet be warlike. She failed. Christianity was to blame and the Germans are right in that—they may not admit it in so many words, but they were fighting for an anti-Christian principle which lost. Ludendorff's renunciation of faith and advocacy of heathenism is very much like the denial of Deity by a man who has committed an offence and finds he has to bear the penalty and so denies that there is a God.

How heathenism is going to help Count Ludendorff is not shown for there is a moral law whether man or nation is heathen or not because the penalty of error and wrong must be paid.

Such a man may go heathen and yet he cannot dodge the moral law which exists for Germans as well as others.

Christian Germans may in a sense be pleased at the manner in which Ludendorff marks off the actions of Germany from those of a Christian nation. Even his denial of the Christian faith and life of men and nations is really an acknowledgment of the superiority of Christianity which does not look with favor upon German ideals as recently enunciated.

Really it looks as if the militant party in Germany sees that Christianity is a challenge and rebuke to the present regime and is trying to discredit it. Germany and the Germans must be careful lest they sully too much the name of "heathen".

MAKING ONESELF DEBTOR

Many persons while against anarchy in politics are "anarchistic" in their moral thinking when the payment of material debts is concerned, said Rev. Lyman H. Hartley in St. George's Presbyterian Church, New York. "Getting into debt often means getting out of debt morally. He made it emphatic that a man should make himself debtor to his fellowmen in everything but money.

Very Rev. Milo Gates of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, said: "Our religion is a revealed religion. So much has been said and written about evolution and devising new religions that some persons have begun to feel that Christianity is not for them but the scientist for the higher critic."

The expenditure of $9,000 in India in missions produces as much good as $143,000 spent in Westchester County, New York, said Dr. Dr. Scudder of the Memorial Hospital at Ranipet, India, asserting that missions are essential to the church. "It cost us only $3 to operate on the mans eyes and $10 to restore the leper to health, both of these men becoming Christian converts. "If today I should write to you that there is a patient who is dying because of lack of nutrition, and that our money is exhausted, you would send that three dollars so that the man could have his operation and Christ could be saved," he said.

"Science is as much a revelation of God as anything else. Our medicines are God's gifts and the knowledge how to use them is His revelation."

Rev. G. W. Grinton defended Easter symbols of eggs, rabbits and new clothes against those who object to commercialness. "So far as these practices being childish, the closer we get to childhood, the nearer are we to the heart of God."

Rev. Robert Norton extolled the hero of the depression who struggled to support his loved ones and said that Simon of Cyrene who carried the Master's cross was represented in thousands of men today.

Belief in God was held as the world's panacea by Bishop Strider, preaching in New York, who said that man had treated God as one of the lesser values whereas He comes first.

Long-range impersonal sinning was attacked by Rev. Norman Vincent, who said some persons would defraud a government but not an individual. The existence of the nation depended upon persons being conscientious in their public as well as private life. Included in his attack was the politician who wasted public funds but not individuals' money.

Dr. A. A. Brill at Temple Rodeph Sholom held that emotional conditions caused the depression and that it was useless to try to cure economic depression by economic measures. "It will not cure itself until the emotional condition subsides." Then it will automatically cure itself, he said.

Religion is born of a passion for righteousness which is a universal urge and civilization will always depend upon it in this sense, said Prof. W. E. Hocking of Harvard in St. Paul's Church, Columbia University, New York. "More than one nation today is repudiating religion as something to be gotten rid of in order to accomplish things. Secular art today is more impotant than the sacred one. Sciences hardly remember religions. There may be some emptiness in art in Russia, but the theatre in Russia is living, because it expresses the genius of the Russian people. New experiments are getting along well without religion and there is no sign of their actually breaking down. The fact is that men are fundamentally good, and we are moral because we are moral, not because we are religious. Civilization more and more will need services which society cannot define nor measure. They are in the hidden kingdom of God which exists in our souls as a working force of our history."

DOCTORS OF DEPRESSION are Senator Huey Long, Dr. Townsend and Upton Sinclair, the author. Their remedies have helped themselves wonderfully, and will continue to do so, financially, no matter what happens to their disciples. While one is born every minute, or oftener, according to the late lamented King of Humbug, Phineas Taylor Barnum, it seems too bad that these clever men, who can not get rich except by their own Utopian phantasies should arouse hopes which cannot possibly be redeemed.

The pastors of the protestant churches in the city made a general exchange of pulpits on Sunday evening, the subject of the sermons being "Good Friday" and being the proper observance of the Sabbath.

A number of ladies met at the residence of Mrs. W. Stuart Hunter, North Street, this afternoon and devoted some time to picking lint to be used in the North West for our wounded soldiers in case of necessity. They intend meeting every week for that purpose.

Mr. Susanna Moodie, the distinguished author, who was born 30 years a resident of this city in which she was beloved by many friends, died in Toronto on the 8th. inst., at the age of 82 years. In 1839 she was married to J. W. Dunbar Moodie, a retired British officer, and in 1823 arrived in Canada from England and settled in the township of Douro, near Peterboro. She was a daughter of Thos. Strickland, Reydon Hall, Suffolk, England. In 1839 Mr. Moodie was appointed by Sir George Arthur to the sheriffship of the district of Victoria, now the county of Hastings, which necessitated the removal of the family to Belleville, where Mrs. Moodie resided until the death of her husband in 1869. Mrs. Moodie's best known works are "Roughing It in the Bush", "Life in the Clearing", "Flora Lindsay", and "Mark Huddlestone." This is cheering news, but how the telegram got through is a mystery as the place is beleaguered by rebels and the wires are down north of Clarke's Crossing.

EXAGGERATED BEHAVIORISMS USED AS POSE

Sooner or Later Shams And Pretenses Are Discovered

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph. D. Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Well-balanced, sincere individuals never indulge in exaggerated behavior. People can exaggerate by word or gesture as well as by deeds. One can talk big and act big, but, at the same time, be a bluff.

The man whose habit it is to brag that his bread, groan and lament is probably not as downcast as he would have us believe by posing. The woman whose gaiety is reckless and daring, and who claims she's having a good time she doesn't care what happens, is also pretending.

People who lie to you you're the most wonderful and most interesting person they ever met probably don't mean a word of it. Men who protestingly insist they are honest should be cultivated only with caution.

When we see people spending money like water with no regard to value received, the chances are that their finances at home is uncertain and they are pretending in order to impress others.

When a boy exaggerates and uses superlative adjectives in telling you how delightful a time he has spent at your home, you may safely be just a little bit suspicious.

Should a man declare he wouldn't take a million dollars, or a million, dollars it's more than likely that he is afraid of becoming a drunkard. When a man tells his sweetheart that's the first and only woman he has ever loved and that it's hard to believe, isn't it?

People who exaggerate are almost invariably pretending. By loud, wild and forceful talk they try to hide and cover up their inferior feelings and feel. They are so fearful lest they should discover that they overdo it! In their zeal to mislead, they overshoot the mark.

But all exaggerated speech and behaviorisms are foolish wastes of time and energy. Those who indulge in it soon lose their senses of value; they don't know or think and do become colored by their moods and incincerity. And sooner or later their shams and pretenses are discovered!

Exaggeration, really a polite form of lying, is not for you! But it can't fool others. It's rather easy to fall into the exaggeration habit when we hope to make an impression.

No worthwhile personality, however, can be built up by empty boasts.

STIRLING LEGION CHURCH PARADE

Attend St. Andrew's Church After Service at Memorial Park

Stirling—On Sunday morning the members of the Stirling Legion No. 238, R. E. S. L. accompanied by the Stirling Band; held their annual church parade. Marching from their assembly rooms on Front St. to the cenotaph in Memorial Park where a memorial service was conducted by Rev. A. S. McConnell and Rev. R. W. Rowland. Following the devotional exercises there, the procession marched to St. Andrew's Presbyterian church, where an interesting service was dedicated to the memory of those who gave their lives in the battle of Ypres.

The church was appropriately decorated for the occasion with flags draping the church honour roll and pulpit. In the vestry corner of the auditorium there was erected a large cenotaph draped with the national flag. Plainly visible across the arms of the cross was the word PEACE. Flowers donated for use by Mrs. E. Ward and Mrs. Ormiston added an Easter touch to the appearance of the church.

Choosing his text from the second chapter of Daniel, Rev. J. A. Hoffend delivered a very inspiring message. He spoke on the privilege afforded by Nebuchadnezzar's dream through his dreams God permitted him to look into the future. But the King as a result of that dream set up a great image and decreed that all should bow down and worship it. Though he had witnessed God's great power once he saw again the persecution of Daniel and his friends who remained steadfast by the faith to serve only one God. Our present economic situation is just such a task master and unless we, like Daniel and his friends remain steadfast, we are apt to find ourselves bowing before some worldly image in the place of God. Surely is often in a worldly sense we become temporarily successful as a result of this strength of material things how much greater would be the reward if we could be faithful always with the minority for the present, but right is ever with the God in majority. Nor is it ever popular in this world. When good is done by one its sup sometimes is but a small, envy begins to fear at that person's success. Indeed, at all times are testing times in the lives of men. Are we, men, do we stand the test, or do we weaken and go with the crowd? Through prayer and the goodness of God we have brought through many a crisis but one more is coming sailing not forget that God brought us through for a purpose and put Him aside from it again would. Will we be able to answer in the affirmative when asked by the Master "Did ye play the game.." as men, as soldiers of the Empire, and in the Name of Righteousness may or may not be greatly rewarded in this world today, but the reward after death for those who stand fast to serve God will be gigantic as compared to the

TWO MEN KILLED AT R.R. CROSSING

Toronto Car Crashes Into Oil Electric Train

Brighton, Ont., April 10—(CP)—Two Toronto men, John Salisbury and Robert Hastings, were killed instantly in a level crossing smash at Inglewood, nine miles north of here, when their automobile in which they were driving crashed into a Canadian National Railway oil electric train, Brighton coroner said today after being advised to hospital in Orangeville. His companion was killed instantly.

The train was travelling from Hamilton to Allandale in charge of Conductor William Penny (121 Park Street) Hamilton and Motorman J. Cornish (295 Bradford Street) Barrie.

The heavy sedan in which the men were riding was carried about 345 feet down the track and the highway is reported to have bulldozed skid marks at the crossing. Coroner Dr. J. T. Thomas investigated. He was assisted by Inspector Jerome and Police Officer P. Kirk of Shelburne.

Anybody Want A Bodyguard?

Chicago, April 10—(AP)— Anybody looking for a good bodyguard might do well to get in touch with a "triple-threat" girl—Miss Helen Portney, who professes to be able to shoot, punch or strangle with equal ferocity.

Helen who is 20 years old stands five feet five inches high , and weighs 138 has come to the big city of Chicago from Tucson in pursuit of her career as a bodyguard.

"The only kind of a gun I haven't tried yet," she said. "Is a machine gun and so far I haven't needed one. Once, when I was 13 years old I knocked out a boy 18 years old. When I let him have it he hit the ground so hard he rolled all the way down the hill from where he was standing."

Large Audience at First Day Of Hydro Cooking Classes

Mrs. E. McLean Well-Known Home Economist is in Charge

That Belleville women were delighted to welcome back to the city, Mrs. E. McLean, home economics expert of Moffats Limited, was enthusiastically demonstrated yesterday when the auditorium of the Hydro building was filled with an interested audience at the annual Belleville Hydro Cooking School.

The spacious and bright auditorium was ideal for the event. The stage presented a very cheerful kitchen scene, with handsome electric equipment, smart green and cream furniture and dainty green gingham curtains at a cleverly lighted window.

Mr. Everett Smith, on behalf of the Belleville Hydro, welcomed the women present and impressed on them the fact that "Hydro is yours to use it". Electric cooking was the cheapest type of cooking in the city, the speaker said, Mr. Smith then introduced Mrs. McLean and her assistant, Miss Edith Moon.

Mrs. McLean

Mrs. McLean's appearance was the signal for a storm of applause. This charming visitor, who has come to the city, year, after year, conducting cooking schools, is looked upon as an old and dear friend by the women of the city. The success of any cooking school conducted by Mrs. McLean is assured from the start.

After responding graciously to the greeting extended her, Mrs. McLean lost no time in beginning the demonstration of cake baking, stressing the fact that the baking was the important thing in cake making, she gave valuable advice concerning the proper use of the ovens of Moffat electric ranges. In cake baking it was better to turn the top oven butter and also the lower on full. Then by using the heat control, the proper heat would be maintained., Mrs. McLean's demonstrations were interspersed with splendid hints for good cakes and questions by the audience were welcomed.

BRIDGE STREET W. M. S.

The regular meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of the Bridge Street United Church was held in the church parlours Friday afternoon, April 5. Mrs. J. Semple presided. Mrs. F. E. O'Flynn offered prayer. Mrs. Brenton gave the devotional selection. A very interesting report of the annual presbyterial held at Picton March 14 and 15 was given by Miss Symons, one of the delegates to the convention.

After the regular business was transacted, the meeting was turned over to Mrs. E. N. Baker and her group. The topic was "British Rule in India."

Miss Lucelle Brown gave a paper on "The Beginnings of British India." She told of the time the English East India Company was formed in 1600 in the reign of Elizabeth and how in 1757 when Clive was victorious against the French and established Bengal.

Mrs. M. W. Sparling traced the development of British influence under the East India Company, with Clive and then Warren Hastings serving as Governor of Bengal.

A most pleasing duet. "Forever and Ever" by Mrs. Sparling and Mrs. F. E. Houston and Mrs. M. W. Sparling.

Further development of British rule was given by Mrs. F. E. Houston, Lord Bentinck was the first Governor to give the Indians a chance to hold office in the India Company. In 1858 the Government was transferred from the East India Company to the Crown of England, and later Queen Victoria was proclaimed Empress of India.

Mrs. E. N. Baker studied the period from Queen Victoria's time to the present day, and the great development of the rule of India by the Indians. The commission of 1904, 1909 and 1919 gave ever-increasing privileges to the Indians, and in 1921, the franchise was extended to over seven million males. At the present time, over twenty-nine million Indians have the vote.

Mrs. Stewart read the words of Dr. Butler of Columbia University on the great British work and accomplishment in India, proclaiming it an outstanding example of the upholding of democracy.

Good Luck in '13' Fan Proves It

Bonarlaw, April 10.—(Special)—Mr. Mal Fitzgerald of Springbrook will not believe there is Bad luck in the number thirteen. At a recent important hockey game in Toronto between the Boston Bruins and the Maple Leafs team when Mr. Fitzgerald was so unfortunate as to receive word that it was impossible to reserve a seat in advance, he travelled all the way to the city trusting to luck. With his usual foresight however he did not adopt ordinary methods to gain his ends but went directly to someone in authority i.e., one of the police officers. Mr. Fitzgerald's hardluck story and his smile won the officer's heart and in a very few minutes he had secured for Mal one of the best seats in "The Gardens", no less than the seat usually occupied by Hon. T. L. Church. Although it was box number thirteen our friend declares he enjoyed the game immensely. Different citizens of Bonarlaw and Springbrook who were listening to the Radio broadcast of that game, state they distinctly heard his cheers.

PROGRESS WEEK IS CELEBRATED

W. Y. Mills, Past Governor of Kiwanis is Special Speaker

Progress Week in Kiwanis was fittingly celebrated at the club luncheon on Tuesday, when W. Y. Mills, of Kingston, past district governor and International Trustee gave a most interesting address on the activities of the club and their plans for the future. There was a large attendance out and the hour and one half spent around the banquet board passed all too quickly. Cliff Barrager, president, was in the chair, with Gordon Bray as song leader and Albert Boynton as pianist at arms. Les. B. Riggs presided at the piano for the community singing.

Joe Shortt requested, that a committee be appointed to handle the Ki-Y football-Loop and this will be done by the president in the near future. Plans are being laid for the field day to be held in Cobourg in June and the horse shoe pitchers of the club will defend the trophy won last year. Two new members were introduced, Frank Domenico introducing Bill Anderson of Rasco's Groceteria, while Len Fusard was introduced by Gordon Logan. The president instructed the newly initiated and the members welcomed them with a rousing cheer. A visit will be made to the 4th line stone church next Tuesday night, the Agricultural Committee of the club arranging the visit.

The speaker was introduced by Jack McIntosh and Kiwanian appreciation was voiced by Fred Smythe. "Billy" Mills brought the greetings of the Kingston Club to the meeting and stated that the Kingston Club had never been sorry for sponsoring the Belleville branch. He paid a glowing tribute to George Griffith, the worthy secretary of the club, before calling him to be the best secretary in the Province if not in International. Mr. Mills spoke of Club Membership, Common Betterment, Aid to Federal and Provincial Governments, International Peace and Goodwill and the Future of Kiwanis.

He told his listeners, that Kiwanis reached its peak in 1929 with regards to members with 103,000, falling through the depression and finding out the spirit of Kiwanis. He explained that friendships had been built in Kiwanis, that would always endure and has brought about a cheerful and monthly hearty state by continued meetings. He also stated, that one half million projects had been completed since its inception and that business and professional standards had been raised.

The speaker also showed that the Kiwanis Club was against all 'isms' and were interested in public nursing and a youth program for underprivileged and normal boys and girls. He believed the club should take an active part in a safety campaign, when it was known that 36,000 were killed in the U.S. last year and one million injured. He thought the erection of the Peace Memorial in Vancouver was a great step, in International goodwill and that Big gateway of Peace between the countries of Canada and the United States would have the desired effect of cementing more fully the peace already established. The speaker asked the members to continue their committee work. During the meeting Phil McNeil read the achievement report for last month and exhorted the members to work for the good of the club and submit their reports regularly.

Woman Takes Seat in House Asked to Vacate

Toronto, April 10.—(CP)—For the first time in history a woman occupied a desk in the Ontario Legislature early today while the House was in session, but not for long.

While legislators discussed in committee Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn's bill to terminate Quebec power contract, a young lady stirred in evening clothes, slipped into the chair beside C. M. MacFie, Liberal member for Middlesex south.

Alex Lewis, clerk of the Legislature, requested her to vacate the place and the House, aroused from its drowsing mood, broke into laughter.

"What is all the noise about?" asked Leopold Macaulay who was speaking. Perceiving the cause of the mirth, he remarked he would have to get his glasses changed.

EASTER HOLIDAY FOR PARLIAMENT UNTIL MAY 20TH

Lapointe Motion For Only a Week Adjournment is Defeated

VOTE IS 90 - 49

W. C. Bell, K.C. and Hon. Charles Stewart Engage in Repartee

Ottawa, April 10—(CP)—With its ministers filibuster-proof and the prospect of a long Easter holiday before it, the House of Commons today settled down to deal with a few items of government business. The Liberal opposition, after the first 48 days fought against it long Easter adjournment, but in the end the will of the government prevailed, and sometime next week the members will go home not to return until May 20.

By that time it is expected Prime Minister R. B. Bennett, recovered from his illness and refreshed by a voyage in England to attend the King's Jubilee Celebration, will be back in his place at the head of the Conservative forces. There also is a number of bills based on the report of the Price Spreads and Mass Buying will be drawn up and ready for consideration by the House, together with the second and final instalment of the government's radio address, the first part of which has already passed the House.

By a vote of 90 to 49 the House last night rejected a Liberal motion to confine the Easter adjournment to a single week.

Government Majority Swelled

Every member of the Conservatives, all who were present, voted with the Conservatives and helped swell the government majority.

The two-day debate gave a long list of Liberal members the chance to speak they had been denied so far. Liberals refrained from taking part in the budget debate in a general way and Conservative back benchers took it pretty much the same. Hon. Ernest Lapointe (Lib., Quebec East) moved his amendment to the motion to go into committee of Ways and Means, calling for a short adjournment, the Liberal rank and file were free to talk and still hold to their position of insisting on a speedy end of the session and an early election.

Rehabilitation of dried-out lands on the western prairies will be one topic discussed by the House when it does. Hon. Robert Weir, Minister of Agriculture, has given notice he will move for the resolution and a bill dealing with the matter. Some time ago the House outlined the studies made by government officials and the type of action the government should take.

Hon. Charles Stewart, former Interior Minister and Charles Marcil (Cons. Hamilton West) tangled three or four times during the afternoon debate on the Easter adjournment, once with the speaker interrupting.

The former cabinet minister claimed the government should sit two weeks "in all conscience" and think up some new scheme, which they hope will interest the country.

"Will the member permit a question?" asked Mr. Bell.

"Yes," replied Mr. Stewart.

"All I want to ask is——," "Louder," shouted a back-bench Liberal.

"If the member will be good enough to answer me—" began Mr. Bell, starting off on a new track.

"What, me?" asked Mr. Stewart.

"Let us hear the question," spoke up another Liberal.

"I am not trying to be controversial," Mr. Bell announced in his most suave manner.

"Louder," shouted two or three Liberals in unison.

That was the signal for Mr. Bell to drop all attempts at conciliation. "Shut up, you fools," he snapped across the floor.

It was also the signal for the Speaker to intervene. The term, he said, was unparliamentary and must be withdrawn.

The Hamilton member withdrew and finally explained that he used the term in the dark of a speech from which Mr. Stewart had been quoting. Mr. Stewart identified the quote not know the date and the incident passed.

But it was merely an interlude. Mr. Stewart claimed "the real reason son for their (the government's) change of heart (on social problems) was the fact that they were afraid to become a malcontent. He was not satisfied to pursue the tenor of their ways and he went out on his own. I refer to Hon. R. H. Stevens. He broadcast his ideas throughout the country and scared the life out of the government. They succumbed to fear.

"He is not a malcontent. He is an agitation of righteousness, he said.

"The Conservatives," retorted Mr. Stewart, "had a change of heart simply as a result of his propaganda."

Later Mr. Bell made a speech of his own. Saying he had no intention of disparaging Mr. Stewart in his earlier observations.

"Carried" shouted a Liberal.

"How that is very funny," sarcastically retorted the Hamilton member. "I am quite willing to have members enjoy themselves. I am quite willing to have them laugh their heads off—and I do not know that much damage would be done if they did."

Then that passing shot, he stalked across the floor and left the chamber arm-in-arm with Hon. Ernest Lapointe.

FILIBUSTER ENDS

years. Conservatives conducted a blockade, in 1923, which ended in the defeat of the government in a general election at which it was defeated by the Conservatives.

Mr. Bell spent the greater all yesterday's proceedings were resumed in the House shortly after noon. Earlier in the day an adjournment motion by Hon. W. Price (Cons. Quebec-Montcalm) was defeated on the grounds it was still Monday. Tuesday did not begin, he said, until o'clock last night, when the usual six-minute prayers were read by the Speaker.

Tired members thought, when they got to their seats, that surely they had seen the last of the power bill. The hour was 2.30 a.m. when it got was carried 42-15 and Attorney General A. W. Roebuck's labor legislation got its second reading. At 12.30 o'clock this morning, Premier Mackenzie King moved the legislature into committee of the whole to discuss the power bill.

Prefers Red Rose Book

Waving a rule book, Col. Price declared committee discussion so soon after second reading could take place only with the unanimous consent of the House and in a matter of such importance that settlement condition was present.

"We're here to get the Bill through the committee," replied the Premier. "We'll get it through if we have to keep the House sitting tomorrow.

"We crack the whip and everyone says 'me too'," declared Leopold Macaulay (Cons., York South). "You have a gang out sleeping now and they will come in and you'll go to sleep. Then stand under the working."

"Are you proud of your filibuster of yesterday?" returned Mr. Hepburn.

In committee, Chairman W. F. Schwenger, (Lib., Hamilton Centre), filled 15 minutes with a speech. On Tuesday, and the bill could be dealt with. When it finally was passed against his decision, the Speaker returned to his chair and Mr. Schwenger commenced to film the objection of the former Conservative.

Charged Dictator's Bill

The power bill was the central Col. Price and was sustained by 40-15. Five minutes later at 1.05 o'clock there was another division, when Col. Price forced the House to divide on the matter of going into committee and the government was again sustained, this time by a vote of 38-17.

Greatest argument took place over the second clause of the bill, which referred directly to the contracts to be cancelled. "It is the worst bill, that has ever gone through this House," declared Col. Price, and he declared it was a dictator's bill. "Talk about a filibuster!" he continued. "There hasn't been filibuster enough. He said the bill had not been printed until five days after it was introduced and when first brought down the schedules were not included.

Both he and the entire Conservative minority were opposed to cancellation of the contracts, he said, and warned the government that "what you're doing is handing a red herring to the people of the Province it was the right sort of legislation.

Declined to Answer

"It's the worst bill I'm telling I've seen in the legislature in my 20 years of experience," he said.

Col. Roebuck charged the only reason the legislature was in session "at this ungodly hour of the morning" was because the Opposition was filibustering.

"It is the determination of the Prime Minister to ride the steamroller, regardless of sun and sun up out," said Mr. Macaulay. "You don't want the public of this province to have any hand or influence in this legislation. You don't want us to have any hand in it. We have an opinion we might have. Otherwise, what reason can there be for this action?"

Quoting from a government return to the legislature, Deputy George H. Challies (Cons. Green-Ox-Dundas) called Hon. Peter Duncan, legal adviser, received $12,500 from the government. He asked if the payment was for expert legal opinion on which the government based the bill. Mr. Duncan, he suggested, acts, but Mr. Roebuck declined to answer.

Harsh Words Used

"This is the most brazen, downright, illegal piece of legislation this assembly cannot be informed what legislation it is based upon, what guided the government," said Mr. Challies.

He pressed for an answer as to why Duncan received the $13,500, but Premier Mackenzie King was trying to indicate he received the sum for legal services.

"Do you expect the government to give you the confidential information as to what the representatives of the power barons might pass it on to them?" asked Mr. Roebuck.

"You take that right back now," said Mr. Macaulay. "We are not representatives of the power barons.

"I never said you were the paid or the engaged counsel of the power barons," said the Attorney-General. "I said you were the representatives of the power interests.

"You did not," replied Mr. Macaulay, "but that is what you said. That is the kind of filthy, dirty innuendo——"

It is a statement of fact," returned Mr. Roebuck.

"You think of everybody's a crook but yourself," shot back the former Conservative member.

Immediate Action Necessary.

Mr. Mr. Roebuck declared the Conservatives were on the side of the big interests, Mr. Macaulay replied: "Let me tell you, I represent no one but my constituency. And I represent my constituency a lot better than you represented the people of Ontario when you put their money into the investment that you headed."

Immediate and immediate action was stressed by M. M. MacBride, independent member for Brantford, who charged the Beauharnois Company was "one of the worst mushroom organizations this country has ever known."

George Pulford (Lib., Leeds) favored cancellation because cheaper power could be had, and Dr. Arthur Roebuck took particular exception to the clause stating no court suits could be instituted as a result of the cancellation.

By a standing vote the bill passed through committee.

After discussion the bill, second reading was given to Mr. Roebuck's amendments to the Election Act and the Premier's Bill amending the Public Service Act.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Jealousy"

The Story of a Man Who Couldn't Believe in the Woman He Loved

In a swiftly paced, highly dramatic and thrill-filled drama, George Murphy, son of Mike Murphy, famous University of Pennsylvania coach, makes his bow as a feature player on the screen, in "Jealousy," which opens a 2-day engagement at the Capitol tomorrow.

Murphy, who is a recruit from the New York stage, is teamed with Nancy Carroll in the leading roles, with a supporting cast that includes Donald Cook, Arthur Hoyt, Ines Courtney and Raymond Walburn, another New York stage player who is making a name for himself in Hollywood.

"Jealousy" tells the story of a prize fighter who kills a man in jealous rage after a quarrel with his wife. He allows the girl to take the blame for the crime until, conscience-stricken, he surrenders and is convicted of the deed.

The remainder of the story is much too good to expose here, but it does not come until there has been unfolded a gripping and absorbing story. Murphy's acting is thoroughly in keeping with him a long way on the road to screen success.

Lee Ramage, leading heavyweight challenger, is Murphy's opponent in the boxing scenes.

"Redhead"

A devastating red-head with a regenerating effect, provides the unusual combination in "Redhead," the amusing comedy-drama with Bruce Cabot and Grace Bradley, which is shown as the companion feature on the same bill.

Redhead, as the picture supposed to be rather notorious in a small town before her return, is exceptional. It's the effect of her company upon a rather dissolute young man that proves to be an exception.

Pointed up by the excellent performance of Cabot and Miss Bradley and the skilful direction of Melville Brown, "Redhead" is the story of a young newspaper man who is exonerated of a murder charge after an unfortunate affair in her apartment, and is unable to get work because of his connection notoriety.

Meeting a drunken millionaire's son, rescuing him by force, and falls in with his shady plan to embarrass the girl's father by getting the boy as part of the scheme, they receive, much to their surprise, a handsome payment for their services on which the government based the bill. The rest, Mr. Roebuck declined to answer.

Harsh Words Used.

"Love In Bloom"

Comics Romp In Gay Melody Romance Film

A flock of new Condons and Revel songs, crisp, crackling comedy and a shooting love story of young love in Manhattan are the ingredients which help to make the new Burns and Allen Paramount film, "Love in Bloom", coming to the Belle Theatre, Tomorrow and Friday, matinee and evening, the best that the madcap comedy team has turned out to date.

Joe Morrison, the handsome young singer, and Dixie Lee are the young lovers, struggling to get along in Manhattan. Dixie has run away from her father's carnival world with no intention of ever returning. But when her goofy brother and sister-in-law, George and Gracie, turn up in the carnival caravan on their honeymoon, she knows that she can't escape them.

All the young couple's savings go to balling out Dixie's father and settling down for life on his feet. Finally Dixie Lee runs away from Joe Morrison in the belief that he cares not for her, that she cannot make him happy.

Then the couple are happily brought together at the close of the picture, although they're for a time hindered by Burns' and Allen's crazy efforts to help their romance.

Prominent in the supporting cast are J. G. Nugent, as the father, and Richard Carle's comedy sheriff, both of whom render effective performances.

Gracie Allen sings for the first time on the screen, a song specially written for her by Gordon and Revel and titled "Lookie, Lookie, Lookie Here Comes Cookie," which in addition to particularly well-cast in an appealing romantic role and again displays the marvelous versatility that won him international fame.

"I Am a Thief"

Warner Bros. latest baffling mystery thriller with Mary Astor and Ricardo Cortez heading an all-star cast is announced as the second feature attraction on the same program.

The picture, based on a story by Ralph Block and Doris Malloy, recounts the breath-taking adventures of a girl jewel thief and her jewel robbers who plot to steal an famous gem-collection of diamonds known as the Karenlnas.

"The mystery is not revealed until the latter is the hands of the American and the death of another who has posed from the start is played by John Wray.

"David Copperfield" Departs

All attendance records for the past five years have been smashed by the run of the picture of "David Copperfield" with its star cast of stirring characters, which closes with the last time Tonight. It is a picture that should not be missed by man or woman, boy or girl.

Dr. Black's Daily Diet Hint

Roe water is made by taking one tablespoonful of rice flour and blending it with a little cold water. Then pour over it a pint of boiling and stir it into ten ounces of boiling water.

After cooking in a double boiler for half an hour, the mixture is strained. Add salt to taste, to make a pint. Rice water, an ideal drink for children, is both nutritious and refreshing.

Isola Bella Mystery Isle

By GEORGE HAMILETON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Stresa, Italy, April 10 (CP Cable)—Isola Bella, where the Tripartite Stresa Conferences open tomorrow, has been for ages a wonderful spot with a touch of mysteries.

Premier Benito Mussolini, at the controls of a three-engined hydroplane, swept down on it from the skies today. His plane circled the island and then settled down on Lake Maggiore.

With his arrival silence fell. A special train carrying newspapermen speaking all the languages of Babel, had put out to pay a special visit. But with Mussolini there, none were permitted to land on the island.

The French, headed by Premier Pierre-Etienne Flandin, are due tonight—and the British, headed by Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, arrive in the morning.

Behind the veil, Isola Bella is likely to see some secret conflicts of opinion. The Italian press continues to belittle demands for action in face of Germany's rearmament. What will Great Britain do? The question continually repeated, it is urged that Britain should abandon her role of mediator and take a clear and definite stand.

The animal immediately turned on the woman trainer and began chewing and mauling her. Heilicit succeeded in getting the bear away and Bert Nelson, another trainer, rushed in and pulled Miss Rasputin to safety.

Boys in North Road Camps Call Selves Happy Lot

From Steenburg Comes News of Camps No. 3 And No. 4

Steenburg, April 10 (Special)—Hello, Radio Fans. Are we happy in the road camps? Just ask us and we will say Yes.

Please don't believe all the rumors you hear. Camp No. 4 has two cases of measles and Camp No. 3 has one; all cleared up and feeling fine. Within two hours of the first noticeable symptoms in a worker, we had Dr. Smith here from Coe Hill and in thirty-six hours we had a fine little hospital built and the patient in it. The patient now stands at the window laughing at the boys going out to work.

We believe our recent article in the Ontario Intelligencer which was also copied in The Tweed News, made some of the boys think because there has not been one-half the number of requests to go out since it appeared.

One of our "younger set" from quite a distance on writing home to his mother advised her as follows: "Dear Mother,—I like the camp and I like my job. I am the 'stall' and my job is to carry 'nippers' from the drillers to the blacksmith to be sharpened and then I carry them back to the drillers." All say that the good mother at home will be happy in the knowledge that her boy is happy.

Work is progressing very favorably at Camp No. 3 but you must excuse us for not having much news this week. Fact is, we are not visiting until the measles patient is back to work. Fortunately all the rest of us are on the job.

Husband Unable To Find Spouse

Local police were today confronted with the mysterious disappearance of a woman who was reported to have left husband in the vicinity of Belleville early today.

According to information given to the police by the woman's husband, when he appeared at the police station, they had stopped over night in a local hotel. Upon arising this morning the gentleman had gone downstairs to attend to, while his wife stated she would start to dress and follow him down, and some later her husband could pick her up in the family automobile. Some thirty minutes later, when the husband started to drive out of the city, however, he could not "find the woman." After driving to Shannonville he returned to the city to lodge his report as no sign of his wife was available on the road.

The man left the police station and a search was in progress. Latest reports are that he could not locate the missing woman nor could they get in touch with her anxious husband. Neither the husband located his lost spouse and continued search at once the police were unable to state late this afternoon.

SOCIAL INSURANCE PROBLEM IS FACED

Ottawa, April 10 (CP)—A. D. Watson, Department of Insurance Actuarian, today told the Senate Banking and Commerce Committee he was not prepared to state whether reformation of the actuarial basis on which the Dominion Unemployment Insurance plan was based would be necessary, if the actual trade and clerical staffs of railways, telephone and telegraph companies were excepted from the scheme.

It would be necessary to segregate risks in each case respecting the retail trade, he said.

The intention of the bill was to cover railwaymen, packinghouse products, trainmen, engineers and section men the official answered Senator James Murdock, former Liberal Minister of Labor.

Heads of Beauties Swell Trustee Opposes Contest

WINDSOR, Ont., April 10.—(CP) —Dr. H. D. Taylor, chairman of the Windsor Board of Education, is opposed to beauty contests in schools because the winner, invariably, gets a "swelled head". A suggestion was made to select a queen and handmaidens from the schools for celebrations to be held in connection with the King's Jubilee observance May 6th at a meeting of the Management Committee of the Board last night.

"I am opposed to the idea of beauty contests," Dr. Taylor told his colleagues. "It may swell the head and develop an artificial value in the future. After all, we are stressing education."

GAS EXPLOSION NEAR MUKDEN

Tokyo, April 10 (AP)—The Rengo (Japanese) News Agency correspondent at Hsinking, Kwantung, reported today 10 persons were killed and 50 injured in a gas explosion in the large Fushun Colliery near Mukden, Manchoukuo.

Guardians of the Desert

By TOM GILL

She ran to pour a glass of water when a heavy, booted foot sounded on the porch outside, and as the three friends raised their eyes the uniforming figure of O'Hearn stood in the open doorway, looking silently down upon Lowell.

Instantly Dick was on his feet, but even more quickly the girl had darted to his side, and jerking the automatic from his holster, leveled it at O'Hearn's breast. Her eyes flashed fire as wild thing at bay.

"You can't take him," she cried. "He's wounded and done I tell you. I won't let you take him."

O'Hearn made no move, his eyes holding the girl's eyes, and for a fleeting moment the shadow of a sudden pain and understanding crossed his face, then very slowly he shook his head.

"You can put up the gun, Nora," he said quietly. "For me the pursuit is off."

Wonderingly she dropped the automatic to the table while, turning to Dick, the captain went on.

"I drove over to tell your friends what few hours ago a wire came from Washington directing the carjacker to you. No reward for them to pursue. It's now a matter for Uncle Sam to handle."

Barnes alone felt that he could guess the reason, for Nora had told him of her connection with Secret-Lowell the day before, but he said nothing—it was Nora's secret, not his.

Then for the first time O'Hearn caught sight of Lowell's arm in the lamplight.

"You're shot, man!" he exclaim ed, stepped forward.

But again the shock his head. It's only a little thing."

Already O'Hearn was at the door. "Price Ross, a doctor, I'll send him," I turned into the land. I can catch him and send him back. There's time to be gone, he ran down the steps.

But the three friends were not free to thank him, for even as he had dressed the wound and with his usual tenderness bandaged it, the thick must remain absolutely quiet for several days and replied in fretful corpuscles. None was at the time. Price with the bandages, was publicly that there was no way left free to return to Verde, although all three realized that the enmity of Sart's band against him it would be more dangerous there than ever before.

But once the doctor had gone, Barnes paused, "What's the next startling news?"

Lowell laughed. He took Dick inhaled a cigarette. "What would you say if I told you there is going to be a dollar reward for you, Nora and the desert—and most of it's been ready for hundreds of years?"

"I'd say you were plumb delirious. "And I would be," Lowell agreed. Then briefly as he could, Dick told them the tale of the tunnel, while Barnes' eyes grew wide as the vast possibilities thrilling him until he paced nervously about the room, his long fingers opening and shutting his dropped on the burning with newly awakened zeal.

"The question now is," Dick concluded, "can we raise that fifty thousand dollars?"

"Can we—we've got to!"

So through the night they laid their plans and in spite of Doctor Price's orders, it was not long drawn when Barnes led Lowell reluctantly to bed.

"After all," he said, "we can't do the work job in a day, and before the week is out I think we'll make friend Sart wish he had never been born."

CHAPTER FORTY-ONE

So it was perhaps for that reason a middle aged person of trustful aspect alighted from the Los Angeles train three days later and registered at the hotel as R. Wellington Wack of Los Angeles, Mr. Wack, according to a prominent notice in the "arrival column of the Verde Times, as well as by his own admission, represented certain wealthy Eastern capitalists interested in promoting irrigation. It was an admission well calculated to make R. Wellington Wack, Esq., exceedingly popular in Verde within an incredibly short space of time.

For the attack on Lowell and Barnes upon the validity of the survey and the honesty of Sart's scheme had brought the stock of the Verde Irrigation Company to an acutely low ebb, until many of Sart's panic stricken followers would have been glad to sell at almost any price provided they could find someone to buy. But until Mr. Wack appeared with his magic trusting eye, like a welcome angel from Heaven, a market for stock in the Verde Irrigation Company simply did not exist. Now all was magnificently changed. Before noon the visiting capitalist bought two large blocks of stock held by Sart's henchmen, and Sart himself, hearing the glad news, sent word to Verde that he would be delighted to see the gentleman that very afternoon, and lay an unusually attractive proposition before him.

Even to Sart's thrifty eyes it was one of the most astounding to save something from the wreckage that Dick's attack had brought in the affairs of the company. In spite of Sart's numerous enterprises, or perhaps because of them, money had always been his desperate need and now that Sart needed cash might be a very handy thing if the ranchers pushed their rights too vigorously and made the desert of their ancestral strategy leaked out by early morning, and shortly after eight o'clock Sart's foreman, angry and hot with the long ride made at a gallop from Verde, stamped in upon the little room where his chief was dressing.

Suddenly he glared in wrathful silence, then throwing his quirt in a corner burst out, "Well, you sure raised hell yesterday, didn't you?"

At the tone Sart's eyes darkened but making no reply, he continued dressing, then as he pulled on his boots asked, "What's up?"

"What's up? Did you sell half of your stock and two sections of land to that come-on guy yesterday?"

Sart confessed he had, amused as he thought back over the transaction. He smiled.

"I'm happy to say I did. In fact I'm a little wondering what that solemn eyed owl ever got with those acres of limestone and cactus."

Sart's amusement deepened. "Well, I'll tell you what he wanted. He wanted to be able to rent it for yourself later in the Times, but by that time the price joke of the desert country will be on Mr. Sart."

Sart buckled on his spurs, but now his smile vanished. He rose and walking to where his foreman stood, gazed his face forward.

"Before I break your jaw, tell me exactly what you mean."

Hastily the angry foreman drove Lowell out of the hills he found a tunnel leading through the Barrier. With a little blasting that tunnel is going to make the best kind of irrigation ditch you can think of—and it lies beneath the land you gave away to that soapy-eyed joker, and by the way, turns out now to be an agent of Lowell and Barnes."

Bitterly the man laughed in Sart's face. "You had it all if your hands—land, irrigation ditch, and the greatest racket on the border. And now what? You sell us out. You're licked, licked by Lowell and his damned Guardians of the Desert. And it that wasn't enough, Bull Pablo's still delirious and doin' a lot of talking." He paused.

Dick laughed. "That was easy. We needed someone who didn't have signs of a single brain in his head."

With consummate dignity H. Wellington Wack rose. "One more crack like that, Sart!" tell your little friend Sart a few of the facts of life."

"He'll know soon enough," Dick answered. "We're planning to break it all tomorrow in the Verde Times."

But Nick Sart was not to wait for that sound announcement.

For somehow or other Nick nor Barnes ever learned how—the news of their successful strategy leaked out by early morning, and shortly after eight o'clock Sart's foreman, angry and hot with the long ride made at a gallop from Verde, stamped in upon the little room where his chief was dressing.

Suddenly he glared in wrathful silence, then throwing his quirt in a corner burst out, "Well, you sure raised hell yesterday, didn't you?"

At the tone Sart's eyes darkened but making no reply, he continued dressing, then as he pulled on his boots asked, "What's up?"

"What's up? Did you sell half of your stock and two sections of land to that come-on guy yesterday?"

Sart confessed he had, amused as he thought back over the transaction. He smiled.

"I'm happy to say I did. In fact I'm a little wondering what that solemn eyed owl ever got with those acres of limestone and cactus."

Sart's amusement deepened. "Well, I'll tell you what he wanted. He wanted to be able to rent it for yourself later in the Times, but by that time the price joke of the desert country will be on Mr. Sart."

Sart buckled on his spurs, but now his smile vanished. He rose and walking to where his foreman stood, gazed his face forward.

"Before I break your jaw, tell me exactly what you mean."

His rage grew fearful as he rode. His best plans were being brought to nothing by one man who had bulked him at every turn, who threatening now to destroy his power in the Southwest, to bring about his laughing stock among the ranchers. Yet it had seemed so safe to sell a few acres of useless desert land, and such easy money so sorely needed to maintain his growing army of henchmen. A spasm of hate passed over him, and he drove his reckless ed at anything you and Dick Lowell are mixed up in. So I took the first train here. So why choose me to act the part of innocent purchaser?"

Sart chuckled. "That was easy. We needed someone who didn't have signs of a single brain in his head."

With consummate dignity H. Wellington Wack rose. "One more crack like that, Sart!" tell your little friend Sart a few of the facts of life."

"He'll know soon enough," Dick answered. "We're planning to break it all tomorrow in the Verde Times."

But Nick Sart was not to wait for that sound announcement.

For somehow or other Nick nor Barnes ever learned how—the news of their successful strategy leaked out by early morning, and shortly after eight o'clock Sart's foreman, angry and hot with the long ride made at a gallop from Verde, stamped in upon the little room where his chief was dressing.

Suddenly he glared in wrathful silence, then throwing his quirt in a corner burst out, "Well, you sure raised hell yesterday, didn't you?"

At the tone Sart's eyes darkened but making no reply, he continued dressing, then as he pulled on his boots asked, "What's up?"
